(1) "The Ui-Conaill, of the Battalion of Munster." (O'Herin).

The O'Connell tribe were driven out of this district by the Fitzgeralds of Desmond before A.D. 1200. The Earls of Desmond owned the whole of this district for nearly 400 years. In 1583 the lands in this Barony were confiscated and parceled out among "The Undertakers."—(See "Limerick in the Reign of Queen Elizabeth," by J. G. Barry, Journal Limerick Field Club, 1897.)

The Desmond Rental of O'Connelloe, 1452, gives a detailed account of their demesne lands, &c., in this Barony. Again under the Cromwellian Settlement a great portion of this Barony changed hands. In the eighteenth century Connelloe was sub-divided for fiscal purposes into the present Baronies, Upper and Lower Connelloe, Shanid and Glenquin.

(3) The lands granted to the Bourkes were again confiscated after the Treaty of Limerick, and they disappear from among the landed gentry of the district, but the Bourkes of Tiermore, near Shanagolden, are commonly reputed to be the present representatives. The Coat of Arms on the tomb of Michael Bourke of Tiermore, born 1724, represent the same arms as those borne by the Bourkes of Clanwilliam. John Bourke was M.P. for Askeaton in James II. Parliament of 1689.
