See parish name. J. O'D.

Situated near the middle of the N.W. boundary of the td. of Abington.

The date of the erection of this church is earlier than can be pointed out by the inhabitants. It is a small building without a tower, capable of containing about 100 persons, and attached to it is a spacious graveyard. At the S.W. corner of the graveyard stands the ruin of a Convent, about 20 feet high, and in length and breadth 60 by 20 feet. In this Convent is an altar of neat stone-work with 2 pillars of the same material about 6 inches in diameter each side. On the right of the altar is the effigy of St. Bernard cut in stown; on the left is that of St. Peter. Opposite the altar is a large stone about 6 feet high, engraved with Latin words partly defaced by what the inhabitants term the "Jocelyn Troops", who were stationed here in the latter end of the 17th century. Other images, amongst them that of the Virgin Mary, are thrown under the altar.

Abington Ph. (Bary. of Ownybeg) -- B. S.

Situated about 8 miles E. of the City of Limerick. It is bounded on the E. by Tuogh Ph.; on the W. by Killeen-agarriff and Abington (in the Bary. of Clanwilliam); on the S. by the parishes of Caherconlish and Tuogh; and on the N. by the County of Tipperary.

This parish is about 8 miles long and six miles broad. Nearly $\frac{1}{2}$ of it is hilly, mountainous and heathy land; the rest is arable and for the most part level. It is badly inconvenienced with roads, the principal being the road from Limerick to Cappamore, &c., through its southern extremity, off which another road leads northwards to the Co. Tipperary.

Situated in, and near the middle of, the N. boundary of Cappanahanagh Td., about 6 chains S. from same boundary, and about $\frac{1}{2}$ a mile from Lisgory. This grave, which is placed on some rising ground in a cultivated field, is 21 feet long, 4 feet wide, and 3 feet high. On each side is a row of large upright stones, from 3 to 4 feet high, and sunk deep in the ground; and at each end stands a stone of similar magnitude. The grave is now uncovered, but would seem to have once been closed by the large stones which are now promiscuously lying on each side of it, besides a heap of smaller ones now overgrown with grass, moss, etc.
