

one thing, he did another. The fact was this, and it was upon record beyond the power of contradiction. The Chancellor of the Exchequer, when he brought forward the bill, pledged himself to the House, that it contained the resolutions only, without any alteration, except in the form. The consequence was, that the bill passed in form without reading; but when it was produced in Ireland, it was a thing quite different from the resolutions, and bound each country in a reciprocal manner, the one to the other. There undoubtedly was a breach of faith, a breach of honour, a forfeiture of promise in the Minister, a bold, an unprecedented insult to the Commons of Great Britain, unparalleled in any former sessions of Parliament. It was a scheme to delude, to blindfold the House, and it deserved to meet with every mark of resentment.

The Attorney General turned to the Address presented to his Majesty on that business; which Address mentioned the substance of the resolutions to be as altered in the bill; and therefore the Hon. Gentleman might as well say, that the Address was stolen upon the House.

Mr. Sheridan replied that he was well aware of the subtleties, and he believed, that the tricks and little manoeuvres of Administration in this business, had more injured their cause, than the badness of the bill itself. The imposition on the honour of the House, and the forfeiture of the Minister's veracity in a matter on which he stood pledged to Parliament, were in full force, and never could be done away. The Address was then read & agreed to.

Thursday, Jan. 26

Lord Courton reported, that his Majesty had been waited on, pursuant to their order of yesterday, to know when he would be attended by this House with their Address of Thanks, and his Majesty appointed this day, at two o'clock, at St. James's.

Took into consideration his Majesty's Speech, which was read by the Speaker.

A motion was made, that a supply be granted to his Majesty.

Resolved, That this House, will to-morrow, go into a Committee, to consider further of the said motion.

After which, they went up with their Address.

Yesterday the House of Peers went in State to St. James's with their Address, to which his Majesty was pleased to give the following most gracious answer:

"My Lords, I thank you for this very dutiful and loyal Address. I receive with great satisfaction your assurances, that you will give the strictest attention to the important objects of national concern which I have recommended to your consideration."

The Marquis of Carmarthen, on being closely asked by Lord Stormont, informed the House of Peers yesterday, that a treaty of commerce was in so much forwardness with Russia, that he had named Commissioners on her part.

According to a late order of the Admiralty Board, the guardships, which are now only nineteen, are to be increased at the exchange in the Spring to twenty-four sail of the line, by the addition of five ships, two at Plymouth, two at Portsmouth, and one at Sheerness. These will employ upwards of three score officers and two thousand seamen, besides marines, so that there can be no further reduction in the naval expences this year; but the vote and allowance will be for the same number of seamen and marines as were borne for the last year 1785.

Yesterday the new Ambassador from Tripoli was introduced to the King at St. James's, and delivered his credentials.

DUBLIN, Jan. 31.
Saturday, January 28.

Sir Henry Hartstonge, after observing that a writ had issued some time ago for the electing of a member for the city of Limerick, and that no return had as yet been made, moved, that the Deputy Clerk of the Hanaper do attend at the bar forthwith.—Ordered.

Mr. Forbes said he had observed with concern, that there was so bad an attendance of members, at a period when matters of such great consequence as the examination of the accounts of public expenditure, the supply proper to be granted to his Majesty, and the taxes to be imposed on the people, were the subject of consideration. In the committee of ways and means this session, a question must occur of the greatest importance, as a matter of finance, that had ever been agitated in that House, whether the additional taxes of 1400000l. imposed last session, should be continued or not? He trusted that the country gentlemen would not forfeit by their inattention to this subject, the character they had established in the country by their glorious exertions during the last session. He should therefore, in order to insure a full attendance, move, that the House be called over on Monday fe'nnight, and that the Speaker write letters to the members, requiring their attendance on that day.

On his own part, he would as much as possible wish to accommodate every Gentleman in the House; and, therefore, he would have no objection to putting off the Supply to the time required.

Lord Luttrell said, that he could not see any necessity for the Hon. Gentleman's motion, as the House, since the commencement of the Session, had been, in his opinion, very properly attended.

The Chancellor of the Exchequer observed, that Wednesday next was the day appointed for going into the supply; and that the circumstance of taxation, admitted of mutability every year, whatever was to be done this year, could have no retrospection to that of former years. Consequently, if the Hon. Member had any project to bring forward, which could possibly go to a diminution of the public debt, it should have his most hearty concurrence.

Mr. Brownlow wished, that the motion made by the Hon. Member would go to the coercion of an attendance of the House on an earlier day; as, in his opinion, Gentlemen should attend, when the most important business of the nation was going forward.

Mr. Corry was happy to find, that the thin attendance of Members was so properly noticed. He wished the Chancellor of the Exchequer would postpone the business of supply, as several papers were yet to be called for, necessary for material information on the subject.

The motion passed accordingly, and that of meeting in supply on Wednesday was discharged, and ordered for Monday fe'nnight.

Mr. Corry, after observing that it never was his intention to call for any unnecessary papers, moved, That the proper officer do lay before the House, an account of all sums of money issued from the Treasury for the last ten years, ending the first of January, 1786.

Ordered.

Mr. Burch of Oldown, moved for an account of the expence of the armed vessels employed in the revenue from the 29th of September, 1784, to the 29th of September, 1785.

Edward Kenny; and after declaring that they were well satisfied with the character and conduct, of said Wiseman, compelled him to take an oath, that he would the next day, deliver up, to Mr. Kenny, all his notes, and bonds, and carry to him, a message from them, that if he did not promise to forgive every person, one half of his debt, they would deal with him; desiring an answer in forty-eight hours.
