We have had occasion frequently to observe on the fatal consequences resulting from the careless disposal of fire arms, and it is with regret, indeed, we have to add this day to the list of calamities emanating from this censurable neglect. Saturday morning, two fine boys, one about twelve the other fourteen years of age, the sons of an industrious farmer of the name of Flanagan who resides at Ballynealon, near Ennis, being left alone, in their innocent gambols the eldest took up a gun, which was placed in a corner of the apartment in which they were, and presenting at the other, he touched the trigger with too melancholy effect, as the charge went off, and from its proximity to the head of his brother, blew it literally to atoms!
