HOUSE OF LORDS.

MONDAY, Feb. 20.

Lord Viscount PERY presented a petition in several merchants and traders in the city of Limerick, complaining of the illegal demands of toll-gatherers in that city, which retarded the progress of their corn trade, and praying such redress as the House would think to grant. His Lordship supported the petition by a representation of the bad consequences which resulted from these illegal practices, and insisted emphatically upon the respectability of the petitioners.

The LD. CHANCELLOR thought the House should not entertain the petition, compatible with the dignity and justice of Parliament. It was in his mind, to affect private property, the inviolability of which he hoped that the House would ever pay a scrupulous regard:—his determination upon the merits of the petition might also bear upon the decision of a Court of Law, where, he understood, a profession was commenced relative to the subject in question.—He said it was with great reluctance he refused any petition of the subject; it was with reluctance he opposed the Noble Lord who introduced it; the Noble Lord had represented the petitioners to be most respectable gentlemen; he could give the House the same assurance—but the respectability of the petitioners could not justify Parliament in an infringement of private property. Let the right of the Corporation to have tolls be first examined into; let their extent and nature be defined; if any collector of tolls exacts them unlawfully, the Court of King's Bench or Common Pleas are fully competent, without the interference of Parliament, to give relief; but unless the Lordships proceeded by a previous examination of the Corporation's right to tolls, he considered it impossible for them to form any resolution (much more to come to any resolution which he presumed was intended) on the legal or illegal nature of their collection.—His Lordship said, sensible of the attention which each Member of Parliament ought to pay to every petition of the people, if the Noble Viscount would have said that this petition was not to be the subject of any consequent resolution, he would have given his objections to its acceptance; otherwise, as private property was concerned, he would not give his assent to receive it, unless

We are happy to find, that the Pamphlet on the Slave Trade, now in general circulation, and supposed to be written by Mr. Fox, has so completely convinced several of the most respectable persons in this and the sister kingdom, of the inhuman practices used in that horrible traffick, that they have forbid the use of Sugar and Rum in their families; and we sincerely hope, that this laudable example will be universally followed in both kingdoms, it being the sure means of bringing the West India Merchants into proper terms, as the consumption of Sugar and Rum is greater in those two countries than in the rest of Europe; and by laying aside them luxuries for a very short time, the Planters will find the necessity of treating their Slaves with tenderness, instead of torture, and that an enlightened people will never gratify their appetites at the expence of their humanity.

Mr. Philip Russell having been appointed Inspector of Streets and Roads for the City and County of the City of Limerick, gives this public notice, that he is determined to put the law in strict force against any person or persons transgressing against the Road Act.

Last Thursday night, about 12 o'clock, Henry Rochford, Esq; Post-master, attended by his servant, going to his house in Francis-street, was attacked near Baal's-bridge by two fellows, one of whom was armed with an iron poker, and the other with a long knife; the servant they knocked down with a blow of the poker, which nearly fractured his skull, but Mr. Rochford being armed with a hanger, not only defended himself, but desperately wounded one of the assailants, and lodged the other fellow (whose name is Nunan,) in the City Jail.
