Andrew Hodge, Supervisor, J. W. Bulkeley, and F. Culkin, Officers of Excise, have lately made several large seizures of private malting and illicit distillation, in the neighbourhood of Kiltrush. Mr. Hodge Mr. Culkin seized 44 bushels of malt at Gower, an entered kiln of Mr. John Kean, Chairman of the Repeal meeting at Kiltrush! John Malloon rested by the Excise Officers of Kiltrush, in an at distillery at Aughnageera, in the act of running rits, and committed for three months, or a miti-ed fine of £6, has been released, the Teetotallers Kiltrush having paid the fine!! This forms an epi-e in Temperance we were not prepared for, and are satisfied, will meet the marked reprobation the great and venerated founder of the cause, the T. Mathew.

DEATHS.

On the 20th inst. at Liskenett, in this county, after a few days' illness, James Therry, of Bettyville, in the county of Cork, Esq. eldest son of John Therry, Esq. one of the late Commissioners of the Revenue, and nephew of Major-General Sir Henry Keatinge, K.C.B. The unexpected demise of this respected gentleman, prematurely cut off in the prime of life, has plunged his afflicted wife and child in profound sorrow, and diffused a deep gloom amongst his numerous relatives—to them, respectively, he was justly endeared by every quality that could render valued an honest husband, father, or friend; and whilst the circle of his social acquaintance must regret the urbane and polished gentleman, the poor of his neighbourhood will long lament the loss of an impartial and intelligent magistrate.

On Monday, at Knock, county Clare, at a very advanced age, George Colpoys, Esq. for many years Seneschal of the Manor of Kiltrush, which situation he filled with the strictest principles of justice towards all parties appearing at the tribunal over which he presided.

Last evening, at his lodgings in Shannon-street, Frederick Banko, Esq. officer of Excise, much regretted by his many friends and acquaintances. He died the death of a sincere Christian, and rejoiced in his Saviour Jesus.
