(1) Pubblebrian Barony. A sept of Norsemen settled along the Maigue river in the 9th century. The district between the mouth of the Maigue and Limerick was called after them Caoille-na-Chosnamhagh, and sometimes Fasagh Luiminegh, the Wilderness of Limerick. The present barony was known as Eschluona, previous to the 14th century. In A.D. 1200 it was the manor of William de Burgho, Governor of Limerick, whose wife was Eva, daughter of Donald Mor O'Brien, King of Limerick. Donogh Cairbreach O'Brien got a grant from King John, A.D. 1211, of the Lordship of Carrig-o-gunnell at the yearly rent of sixty marks. The barony took its present name from Brian duff O'Brien, third son of Conor O'Brien, Thanist of Thomond, who lived at Carrig-o-gunnell in the 14th century.

(2) "I.P." after the name of an old Proprietor meant that he claimed as an "Innocent Papist."

(3) This was ^{HENRY} John Bouchier, fifth Earl of Bath, who died without issue in 1654, leaving the Lough Gur estates to his widow, Rachael, daughter of the Earl of Westmoreland. This estate was granted to his father, General Sir George Bouchier, in 1580.

(4) Margaret O'Brien was daughter of Richard Stephenson, of Dunmoylean, who was killed in 1642, and his wife, Margaret, daughter of Sir Brian duff O'Brien, of Carrig-o-gunnell, who died in 1615. Brian duff had got a re-grant of Carrig-o-gunnell and the Lordship of Pubblebrien from Elizabeth. His only son, Donogh, died without issue in 1632, and was succeeded at Carrig-o-gunnell by a third cousin, Donogh, of Downe, who married the above Margaret who had been left considerable estates in Pubblebrien by her uncle and mother. Both her own and her husband's large estates were now forfeited.
