on account of seventeen sail of gun-boats, being at the Cherbourg Roads. Likewise the Hercules, of the Maidstone frigate, and the officer off that port, had received by a cutter from Maroon, dispatched Captain Price, commanding the convoy of ten or twelve sail of vessels, anchored at La Hogue. — Sir Edward Pakenham of the Trent, has sailed, we understand, to Malaga, to supply the vacancy occasioned by the unfortunate frigate Jason, which was wrecked off there. — Lord Nelson, I believe, is expected here. A peep was taken into the bay yesterday: we stood quite close in. — The fleet is all ready for sea, and have a fresh wind N. E. if they choose to embrace it; and is with them.

1. — The Swift cutter, Lieutenant Parker, arrived here from England. The fleet had the pleasure of lately detaining several vessels soon to be condemned. Several vessels were sent to the convoy, which were a few days at an anchor off La Hogue, were attacked by a gun-brig detached from this fleet. Notwithstanding the efforts to destroy them, after being much damaged by the fire, made their escape. They went to the river very clandestinely, close on shore.
The gun-vessel that opposed them suffered some damage, although not, we understand, to any considerable extent. A few

The following receipt is literally copied from an English Morning Paper: — "Take the branch of a Vine, and turn it down into the earth; let the mould cover it perfectly, and the next year it will produce Cucumbers in constant succession." This reminds us of the advertisement of a gardener, who once advertised Cabbage-seed for sale, that would produce Journeyman Tailors!

On Thursday morning last, the post-boy conveying the mail from Drogheda to Slane, was stopped by a single footpad, armed with a knife and a case of pistols, who robbed him of the Northern bye-letters for Slane, Trim, and Navan, and the Slane bag of letters dispatched from the General Post Office on the 18th inst.
