

Officer of the day, that is sent on that auspicious occasion.
in the Cork garrison on that auspicious occasion.

The 8th Hussars have arrived at Newbridge from Dublin.
On Friday evening the second performance of the officers of the 85th Light Infantry at Waterford, in compliance with the request of several ladies and gentlemen of the city and vicinity, took place at the theatre, Beresford-st.

There were not any military appointments in the last Gazette, owing to her Majesty's absence from London.

The command of the local Pensioners at Waterford is vacant by the death of Captain Derinzy,

Several of the 60th Rifles in Dublin have fallen victims to the cholera—the disease has completely left the 2d Queen's.

The 28th Regt. are confined to barracks at Plymouth, owing to the prevalence of cholera.

Major-General Jervois has resigned the office of Master of the Ceremonies of Bath, after holding it for fourteen years. Major F. Brownlow, brother to the late Lord Lurgan, it is generally supposed will be his successor.

Mr. Ferrall, Governor of Malta, and General Ellice are expected to arrive in the next packet at Southampton.

The officers of the 2d Life Gdards refuse to associate with Cornet Heald, husband of Lola Montes. His retirement from the Regt. is daily expected.

82D REGIMENT—It is with deep regret we have to record the death of Brevet-Major Moore, 82d Regt., which took place at Devonport on the morning of the 9th inst., after an attack of cholera of 16 hours.—Never was a man snatched away in the pride and prime of life more generally loved, both in his Regiment and out of it, than Major Moore, and his loss will long be felt by his brother officers. Major Moore served for some time on the staff of Major-General Sir R. Armstrong in Canada, in which country he was well known and will be regretted. Major Moore was appointed Ensign on the 18th of September, 1828; Lieutenant, by purchase, on the 12th of July, 1833; and Brevet-Major, on the 9th of November, 1846. The 82d have lately suffered very severely by cholera in Devonport, and many Serjeants and men have fallen victims. Five companies of the Regiment were moved on Monday by rail to Exeter, under Major Robertson: only two companies, with staff, are now at Devonport. Ensign Gordon was attacked with the disease soon after arriving at Exeter, but he is much better. The cholera has only attacked the companies stationed in George's land Cumberland-square Barracks, consequently they have now been moved out of them to Mount Wise, which are fine, healthy barracks. George's and Cumberland Barracks were condemned seven years since, yet, strange to say, soldiers are still made to occupy them. All the disease in the Regiment is very properly attributed to these barracks, which certainly are a disgrace to the nation. Every case of cholera which took place at Cumberland and George-square Barracks has proved fatal.

Lieut. Halliday succeeds to a company of the 82d. The 28th Regiment, in the Citadel, Plymouth, are quite free from cholera.

The 4th Regt. have moved from Winchester to Portsmouth, occupying the new Anglesea barracks.

Colonel Weare, the Commandant at Chatham, whose illness has been frequently alluded to, has been removed to Dover.

The court-martial at Malta on Lieut. Wolrige, R.M., for unofficer-like conduct in knowingly and maliciously charging Lieut. Richards, R.M., late of the Howe, with ungentlemanly and unofficer-like conduct in Naples Bay, having found this charge partly proved, adjudged the prisoner to be severely reprimanded and admonished to be more cautious in future.

Captain Johnston has joined his Regiment (the 27th) from Dublin, at Glasgow.

LAST SANDHURST EXAMINATIONS FOR COMMISSIONS IN THE ARMY.

Candidate's letter of instruction to present himself for examination said he would be appointed to—Reg. Candidate stripped and examined by Dr. Pickering. Surgeon's Report states whether free from bodily disease and from stammering. Major Adams then received the candidate, and asked for confirmation certificate and Surgeon's report—then passed on to Professor of Mathematics—Asked, where educated? who taught him Fortification? how far he had gone in Mathematics? Noted down surds, logs, mensuration, but only gave him five sums in first four rules of arithmetic. Rev. Mr. Chepmel next examined in English and Latin. Translated and parsed one chapter of Cæsar; wrote out translation of another chapter—2nd and 3rd chaps. 3rd book. Not examined in French or German, having, it is presumed, passed in Latin. Major Adams then examined in Fortification. Called upon to explain the construction of Vauban's and modern systems. Geography, nine questions, viva voce.—1. Where is Hong-Kong? 2. What is the capital of China? 3. What city in China belongs to the English? 4. What is the capital of the Brazils? 5. Where is the Island of Socotra? 6. Where is Cape Clear? 7. To what group of islands does Teneriffe belong? 8. Is there anything peculiar in the Great Desert of Sahara, and name it? 9. Give the capitals of all the countries in Europe, including England, Scotland, and Ireland. History, ten questions.—1. When did William I ascend the throne? 2. Ditto Charles I. 3. ...

EXECUTIONS IN LIMERICK.

This day, at 2 o'clock, the extreme sentence of the law was carried into effect, on the scaffold, in front of the County Gaol, where Catherine Dillon, for conspiracy to murder her husband, Daniel Dillon, and John Fogarty, for perpetrating the foul deed, were both executed; also John Frewen, convicted of the murder of Peter Nash, at Garden-hill.

From an early hour of the morning, the culprits were engaged at religious devotion. Catherine Dillon gave earnest attention to the spiritual consolation ministered by the Rev. Messrs. Bunton and Quinlan, and was unceasing in her supplications for mercy from God. John Fogarty was attended by Rev. Messrs. Molloy and Halpin, who speak in terms of praise of his perfect resignation and penitence. John Frewen, a tall, handsome young man, from the day of his conviction to the hour of his ignominious death, was perfectly reconciled to his fate, and unremitting in devotional exercise, under the care of the Rev. Wm. Bourke, gaol chaplain, and Rev. Mr. Bergin, O.S.F. The necessary preparations having been made, the executioner proceeded to the condemned cell of each of the unfortunate convicts, and pinioned their arms in the usual way. Mrs. Dillon, when this awful ordeal arrived, displayed extraordinary fortitude and resignation, having, in a pathetic tone required that the cords might be made tight on her arms, a request which was complied with.

The Sub Sheriff, William Leake, Esq., preceded the mournful procession to the scaffold. John Frewen walked with a firm step, and responded in a loud tone to the prayers of the officiating clergyman by whom he was accompanied, as did John Fogarty (the father of six children, with a wretched wife, now widow and orphans), who was attired in the same dress he wore the day of trial. Catherine Dillon, though evidently feeble, moved from her cell, at the female side of the prison, with a firmer step than might be anticipated. She was attired in a black cloak, gown, and handkerchief, wore a widow's cap, white drawers, &c., the hood of the cloak covering her head. She looked pale, yet comely and interesting, and it was quite perceptible the unhappy woman was sincerely contrite, and prepared for the awful change about to take place.

On reaching the drop, John Frewen proclaimed his innocence in presence of the large concourse assembled outside. We subjoin his declaration:—

"I most solemnly declare, in the presence of God at whose judgment seat I am about to appear, that I am not guilty of the murder of Peter Nash, for which I am to suffer, nor of any other murder. I was in my own house with Thady Brien, William Hogan, William Meehan, and my sister, at the time of the murder, and only left it to carry the murdered man to his own house. I also solemnly declare, that I never entered into a conspiracy for the murder of Peter Nash; never, during my life, went to take arms, or joined in any other whiteboy offence. I wish to state, that I never, at any time, mentioned the name of Stritch as the person who fired at Nash. I am entirely resigned to the will of God. I unite my sufferings to those of my Redeemer, in whose merits all my hopes are fixed. I freely, from my heart, forgive my prosecutors, who swore falsely against me, and I pray God to forgive them for their wicked perjury. I most earnestly beg the prayers of all who read this my solemn declaration.

"JOHN FREWEN."

When Fogarty ascended the platform, Frewen shook him cordially by the hand. Fogarty said nothing on the scaffold but recorded in his cell, in presence of Rev. Mr. Bourke, and John Fitzgerald, turnkey, the following declaration:—

"AUGUST 11—As I am to appear before God for judgment on this day, I wish to declare solemnly that the statements made by some of the witnesses on my trial—that there was a sinful intimacy existing between me and the female, Catherine Dillon, is false; and that I never, in my life, even had a bad thought towards her in that respect."

"JOHN FOGARTY."

Catherine Dillon made no verbal or written declaration.

The ropes having been adjusted, the fatal bolt was drawn, and in a few minutes the three victims were launched into eternity. Frewen died in great agony, owing to the awkward manner in which the noose of the rope caught behind his ear. Fogarty expired almost without a struggle, and the world closed on Mrs. Dillon, after two or three convulsive heavings.—When turned off, she beat her breast twice, imploring mercy, and before the drop fell, she could be distinctly heard by the crowd, exclaiming, "Lord have mercy upon me—Christ have mercy upon me."

The mother of Fogarty, a very old woman, was a witness of the execution, and did not shed a tear, but her feelings were deeply moved. The uncle of Frewen was in the window of the County Infirmary, opposite the gaol, and fell on his knees to pray when the fatal drop fell.

The City Police, under Sub-Inspector Williams, were on duty in front of the prison during the execution, which a great multitude of persons had assembled to witness.

The body of Catherine Dillon was given to her friends after being taken down from the drop.
