

By the Commercial Treaty lately concluded with France the ships of that country may come into the ports of this kingdom, and load provisions for the East and West Indies, without being subject to the alien duty.

It is with the greatest pleasure we are informed that our truly patriotic senator, the Right Hon. Henry Grattan, Esq, is determined to exert his transcendent abilities once more for his country, on the Parliamentary theatre, on the subject of the late commercial treaties, not to oppose them, but to give them full operation in Ireland, by removing every partial construction that may invidiously be made in a neighbouring kingdom, and bringing forward a law to preserve to our use the materials of manufacture.

A meeting, we hear, from very respectable authority, will be held in London prior to the approaching session, composed of the first characters in both kingdoms. The purpose of the above meeting is to sketch the great outlines of a plan for the regulation of the commerce of the two kingdoms. Many gentlemen of consequence will set off for the purpose in the course of a fortnight.

The accomplishment of the above business is most devoutly to be wished for. But when it is brought forward, we hope none of that spirit of monopoly—none of those restraints to commerce, or infringements on the constitution, which characterized the odious exploded Propositions, will form a part of it. If England wishes to bind Ireland for ever to her by that strongest of all ties—affection, she will act upon the broad scale of candour and liberality, and at once put an end to commercial jealousy and bickerings.

Extract of a letter from Londonderry.

“On Thursday last the Mayor, Aldermen, Burgesses, and Sheriffs of this city unanimously agreed that an address be presented to the Earl of Bristol, congratulating his Lordship on his return to this country, which being presented by the Lord Mayor and Sheriffs, at the Downhill, his Lordship returned an answer thanking them in the most elegant and energetic terms, for the kindness of their wishes, &c.”

Nothing can exceed the squalid wretchedness of our police foot.—It is really matter of astonishment where such a groupe could be selected—and yet we do not see any steps taken either to make these fellows look like—men, or to learn them that discipline which can render them in the smallest degree useful either as a Watch or a Police.—Why in the name of wonder, are not these guardians to the city peace taken to drill? If they are to carry arms why are they not taught the use of them? One half of them scarce know which end of their musket a bayonet should be fixed to—and for their appearance, Hogarth's city trained bands are PRUSSIANS to—the Dublin Police.

We hear a young gentleman of fortune, who has been famous for leading the Ton, has resolved on a new and capital stroke. He has cent affair, is, we hear, in a fair way of recovery.

Yesterday afternoon Sir Samuel Bradstreet, and several of the Judges, returned to this city from the summer assizes.

As the topic of the unfortunate Fitzgerald has revived, in consequence of the late opinion of Sir Samuel Bradstreet, in the case of the King against Foy, at Ballinrobe assizes, we think it not improper to state shortly the facts, as they stand.

At the assizes of Castlebar, Foy was tried with several others, for the actual murder of M'Donnell and Hipson, and acquitted. Another indictment was brought forward against him, for provoking, stirring up, and procuring the murder of the same M'Donnell and Hipson. To this last he pleaded auterfois acquit, and the plea was allowed.

The two indictments were founded on the statute of 10 Hen. VII. chap. 20. by which it is enacted, that “if any person or persons of malice do provoke, stir up, or procure any other person or persons to slay or murder any of the King's subjects, within this land of Ireland, be deemed traitor likewise as if it should extend to our said Sovereign Lord's person, and to his Royal Majesty.”

Upon this statute Lord Chief Baron Yelverton and Mr. Baron Power held, that the provoking, stirring up and procuring, was a distinct substantive treason, and not derivative.

Sir Samuel Bradstreet held, that the procuring is in the nature of an-accessorial offence, and ought to be considered upon the ground of principal and accessory, and on that ruled that the plea ought to be received.

As this great question is thus differed upon, there can be no doubt but a writ of error will be brought, that the law may be settled.

LIMERICK.

A correspondent observes that Munster has produced more great men and geniuses, than any other province in Ireland;—An Hutchinson, a Yelverton, a Scott, a Curren, a Fitzgibbon, a Paterfon, a Carlton, a Toler, &c. in short all the great Law Officers are Munster men, who, for the most part, have advanced themselves merely by the dint of merit.

Died. Last Thursday at Rawlighthown, in the 83d year of his age, Edward Croker, Esq; his death is universally regretted, as he was sincere in his friendship, unbounded in his hospitality, affectionate to his children, and a social companion to all his acquaintance. He served the office of High Sheriff for the county of Limerick, in the year 1735.—Same day, Mr. Ryan, master of the Cock Inn.—Last Friday in Cork, Henry Gould, Esq; universally regretted by all his acquaintance.
