Sunday last, at his residence, Bridge-street, after a lingering illness, the late Dr. George Byam, Esq., Medical Superintendent of the Limerick General Dispensary. — A young Gentleman whose premature death must be a source of deep and lasting affliction to the friends and relations of his nearest stay upon earth; while to the many respectable friends who knew and could appreciate his private worth, it has become one of general and sincere regret. Because, in his personal character, there is no idle panegyric to individual excellence, which extrinsic circumstances, however flattering, never can afford. Those natural endowments were enhanced in an eminent degree by his affable manners, winning address, and the advantages of a superior education. No, so sure to constitute the grace and charm of social life. Designed for a highly respectable profession, rapid was the indication of his future excellence in the medical art, and, though called by a severe domestic calamity to take charge, at a comparatively youthful age, of a large public establishment, with an energy and address equal to the crisis promptly surmounted the peculiar difficulties of his situation, and the current in the most satisfactory manner. Death has released him from the trust, but with a character pure and unassuaged as when first he entered on his arduous duties. Had Providence but spared him the enjoyments of health to realize the magazines of anticipations of his family and friends, few Practitioners, it may be truly said, were likely to close their mortal race, in the fulness of time, without calculating that he was due to a professional career at once beneficial to the community and honourable to himself. Brief, however, as has been the span of his earthly existence, yet much of good has he accomplished in his sphere; and as the grateful sense of public feeling for departed worth has warmly attested in this mournful event. Yesterday morning in Colonel-street, Arthur D’Esters, Esq., to the inestimable wife and young family, to whom his death is an irreparable loss.
