 He just recalled the story of a man who sat at table of potatoes and milk.
 He was disgusted to find a dead mouse in his mug of milk and drew the woman's attention to it.
 He simply caught the mouse by the tail, threw it out the door and drank the milk. With a flourish he thrust it aside.
 "What a bad cess to you," she said.
 "If you had a mouse or milk without a mouse won't please you.

Things much worse may have happened to the food we use today but fortunately we do know it, or, if knowing, we know how to forget it. I know a man who never uses cabbage because he found a cooked snail on his plate. He forgets that in many countries snails are considered a delicacy.
 The best after all to take what we can and try to feel happy and to make no inquiries as to its origin.
