Cois-Sleibh (At the foot of the mountain). This barony runs East and West along the Galtee range and comprises some of the most fertile land in Munster, the "golden vein." The Fitzgibbons (the "White Knight" and the "Sons of the Old Knight") owned the greater part of this barony until the latter part of the 16th century.

(1) This was a branch of the Tipperary family of Cantwell. The de Cantevilles, a Norman family, got extensive grants of land in the Counties of Kilkenny and Tipperary early in the 13th century.

(2) Captain Hugh Massy of Duntryleague, an officer in the Cromwellian army, was ancestor of the Massys Baron Massy and Massey Baron Clarina and the cadet families of that name, of whom the Stoneville family are the principal. In the course of time the Massys became, both from their position and property, one of the most influential families in the County Limerick, and retained their large estates and political influence up to a recent period. Down to the passing of the Land Purchase Acts the Massys still held upwards of 53,000 acres in the Counties of Limerick and Tipperary, which the above-mentioned Hugh Massy acquired under the Act of Settlement.

(3) The Fitzharris's were Barons of Kilcavan, in the County Wexford, and were descended from the noble house of Meyler Fitzhenry. Sir Edward Fitzharris was the youngest son of Mathew Fitzharris Baron Kilcavan, and had his estates in Coshlea Barony, confirmed by patent from James I. His son was executed at Tyburn for treason A.D. 1681.

(4) Robert Oliver was a Cromwellian officer, who got large grants of land in this barony. He purchased Clonodfof Castle and demesne of the Fitzharris's from the grantee and changed the name to Castle Oliver. The Right Honorable Silver Oliver, who was for many years before the Union M.P. for the County Limerick, introduced a settlement of Palatines into this district about 1740. This fine estate went in the female line, early in the last century, to the Gascoyne family, now represented by Colonel Gascoyne and the Hon. Cosby Trench. This estate has been lately sold to the tenants under the Land Act.

* This grant was made to the person who was at the time Bishop of Limerick in his private capacity, not as Bishop. It is not now easy to identify this Bishop, but it was probably John Vesey, who was promoted from Limerick to the Archbishoprick of Tuam in 1678. He was Chaplain to the House of Commons in 1661, and was evidently a persona grata with the Government, as we find him promoted to the Rectorship of Shandrum and Vicar of Charleville, Dean of Cork and also Archdeacon of Armagh. His father succeeded him as Archdeacon in 1672.
