I hope, plead ny excuse for adding to the solemn burial service s few words, very few, of special reference to our very dear departed friend. We are about to lower into their low y bed the mortal remains of what, but a few days since, was a sulendid and stately specimen of womanhood. It is not a case and decrepit age tottering to its fall; it is not the ripe finit dropping from its stem; it is not like those sere and yellow leaves that swirling down upon the wintry winds-a'l these things may be sad and depressing, but they are things may be sad and depressing, but they are natural twe may be sorry, but we bow to the inevitable, and teel that the event was to be expected. That was not the case with our deardeparted. In the bloom and prime of life she has been hastily called away. The news of her death was a shock to me; it was a bolt from the blue. It is less than a fortnight since I was anothing to It is less than a fortnight since I was speaking to her at the Orphan Bazaar in Limerick; and it is stretling to think that the well-remembered eyes that beamed upon me then are now glazed in death beneath that coffin-lid. I never tho, ght it would fall to my lot to consign her remains to the grave, and indeed I execute the duties of my office on this occasion with deep emotion, and a profout I sense of loss. Nixteen years ago, on the first day of this month, I consigned to the grave the remains of her husband, alongside of whom we are about to lay her. Bhen fuge whom we are about to may not. Interest that is moreal! My thoughts leap fondly back over the vears, and I vividity remember how many a time, in their hospitable house in Altavilla, I gazed with admiration on that splendid man and woman in all their youth and strength man and woman in all their youth and strength and beauty. Dust and ashes! Withered leaves! they have hurriedly wasked across the stage: the drama is over, and the ourtain dropped. "Vanity of vanities, eaith the preacher,—all is vanity!" Our departed sister will be missed from this otherch and parish. She steadily and constantly belong our friends, area, single the constantly helped our friends, even since she ceased to reside in our neighbourhood; her preence was ever welcome in our congregation, and her sweet and thrilling voice mingled in our hymns. We offer our sympathy to all her surviv-ing relatives in their bereavement. But all my remarks must not be pitched in a minor key. The Christian Religion - to those who believe in ittells us there is a bright side, even to death. tells us there is a origin side, even to death. It tells us that that event is poverless to touch or affect the real Being, the Soul, the Identity, the Ego. The body, which we now reverently-lay by, is but the now uccless and discarded garment, and the soul that wore it for a time here unhurt and unseathed into the spiritual body that God has provided for it in His Paradise, there to await the growning consummation of the second coming of Christ. " And in the morn those angels faces smile

THE LATE MRS. GRIFFIN. | ECHO OF RECENT UNIONIST MEETING:

Case at Petty Sessions

At the Petty Sessions yesterday, Thomas Devacey was summoned for an assault on Edmond L. Wickham on the 10th October, and the latter appeared to answer a summon for an assault on the former on the same operation.

Mr. J. S. Gaffary, Crown Bolicitor, prosecuted, it being stated that owing to the parties refusing for prosecute, the authorities had taken up the

1'. J. O'Sullivan, solr., represented Devaney, and Mr. Blood-Smyth, solr, Wiskham.

When the cases were called, Mr. O'Sulliven applied for an adjournment in the interest of the ace of the city.
Mr. Gaffney objected. The usual course was first to have the evidence for the prosecution. Mr. O'Sullivan—We are all acquainted with the incidents that have given rice to these procecutions, and that being so I would ask to be allowed to give my reasons for calling for an adjournment.

Mr. Gaffney—I cannot be taken as consenting to an adj urnment, and I warn you that I will strongly oppose it. Mr. O'Sallivan-I expected that. Mr. Gaffney said he might be wrong in the course he was taking, judged by public opinion, but he opposed an application for an adjournment with all the responsibility attached to his position and as a citizen. He thought these cases should be heard in open court—in coram publico—and let the blante be placed on the proper shoulders, and punishment inflicted on the parties responsible. When the evidence was heard was the time to make an application for an adjournillent.

The Mayor—Mr. O'Sullivan's intention is to make a singestion to the Court.

Mr. O'Sullivan—Yes, and I am supported in that by my friend. Mr. Blood Smyth.

Mr. Gaffney-How can you come to a conclusion midl you hear the facts?
Mr. O'Sullivan—The magistrates of the City of Limerick are not living in Mars. I characterise this as a trivial and absurd prosecution. The Mayor -- We will hear the cases

Mr. O'Sullivan applied to have them taken together, and the Crown Solicitor assented.
Mr. Gaffney said the Crown had prosecuted both defendants for an assault on each other, as when requested both declined to take proceed They wanted to let bygones be bygones, but the Crown had to step infin the interest of the community which was concerned in this matter.
The Mayor—In a case of this kind where there is no bodily harm inflicted, is it usual for the Crown to step in?

Mr. Gaffney—Cert inly.
Mr. O'Sullivan—It is a most unusual thing to ee Mr. Gaffney here, but we are all glad to see Mr. Gaffney-I have to do my duty as well as Constable Forde in his evidence stated that he was on duty outside the Theatre Royal on the 10th October, the date of the Unionist meeting. There, was a large crowd outside the premises, and after some time a man named Patrick Kinavane was ejected from the meeting, and a little later Devaney was thrust out by Mr. Wickham. Both were in handigrips, and in breaking away Devaney gave Wickham a short knock with his left hand

To. Mr. O'Sullyan-He did not see Wickham strike Devaney, but he could have done so.

Edmond' L. Wickham's testimony was to the effect that he was at the meeting in the capacity of a steward but did not remember seeing Devaney there. He had a recollection of putting Devaney there. He had a recollection of putting a man out, and when he got to the door a scuffle ensued between them. There was a hostile crowd the street, and in order to free himself from the man he made a stroke at him.

To Mr. O'Sullivan-He made no charge against Devuney, and desired to live in peace with every body.

Head Constable McKernan testified to witness ing the ejection of Devaney by Wickham. they got to the door they were in handigrips. Wickham was endeavouring to push the other down the steps, and he saw him strike him on the jaw.

Thomas Devaney in his evidence stated that he was at the Unionist meeting, but his sympathies were not with the views of the speakers. hissed some of the remarks, and was approached by Mr. Wickham who asked him to leave and he did. On going down the steps leading to the entrance he got a little push and held on to Wickham's arm to avoid talling. The crowd then made a rush in his direction.

a rusa in his arrection.

District Inspector Craig deposed to seeing the incident following Devaney's removal from the Theatre. Wickham struck Devaney, and the latter retaliated. The crowd then rushed in, and the police intervened. Mr. Gaffney-This was the cause of a great deal of excitement among the crowd? Yes.

Mr. O'Sullivan—You attach a great deal of interest to this incident between Wickham and Devancy? No.

Mr. O'Sull van—You are introduced as the umpire to decide between the relative merits of combatants. Now tell us who won the buttle ! One thing is certain Mr. Wickham is able to use his hands (laughter).

This concluded the evidence, and Mr. O'Sullivan, supported by Mr. Blood-Smyth, asked to have the summons dismissed.

Mr., Gaffney appealed to the Bench to put down scenes of violence and disorder in the Mr. O'Sullivar-You want to make a scapegoat of somebody. Mr. Gaffney replied that he did not care who he made a scapegoat of as long as he stopped violence on the thoroughfares. The Mayor-We have decided to dismiss the
