Start Of Winter Begging Campaign?

"I hope these people are not going to start haunting the city and start their winter begging campaign," said Justice Gleeson at City Court to-day, summing up in a case in which two defendants, of no fixed abode, were summoned for begging.

Defendants were Mary Bridget McCarthy and Julia Cawley, who each appeared on begging charges.

Mr. M. B. O'Malley, solr., defending, said both women admitted the offences. One of the women was under medical care at the moment and would this week be attended by Dr. Chance from Dublin. Both were in very poor circumstances.

Inspector Murphy, prosecuting, said there were 13 previous similar offences against Bridget McCarthy.

His Worship, after making the quotations at the outset, said that these people were a positive nuisance. He would impose a sentence of one month's imprisonment with hard labour on each defendant, not to be imposed if they were of good behaviour.

by the coat and struck him on the chest and then pushed him into the drain. Defendant also used very bad language.

In reply to Mr. T. A. Lynch, solr. (for Keating) witness denied that he provoked defendant. He also denied that the trouble arose over the grazing of a farm.

Michael Keating said that he found O'Connor's dog chasing his cattle and that when he met plaintiff on the road he spoke to him about it. O'Connor then provoked him and he knocked him down. Witness was sorry as he now realised what he did was wrong.

New Link-Line Railway Is Almost Completed

THE construction is almost completed of the link-line of railway from the permanent way at Rosbrien to the Cement Factory at Mungret, a distance of three miles.

The all-in cost of the job is stated to be in the region of £50,000. It was carried out by C.I.E., who, at a public inquiry, established the need for a rail connection with the factory.

It is stated that the link-line may be in service before the end of the month; it will certainly be in operation before October is far advanced.

Once the rail connection to the factory is in full service, C.I.E. will bring to an end the haulage of cement by road. The change-over, it is claimed, will mean a big saving in transport costs.

CLOSING OF MAIN ROAD.

The closing to traffic of the main road from the city to Cork—across which the link-line runs—while trains pass will cause a good deal of inconvenience.

An assurance was given when the link-line was first mooted that a bridge to carry the railway over the road would be built. Does that assurance hold good?

Limerick Licensed Trade: Protest To Minister

At a recent general meeting of the Limerick Licensed Vintners (says a supplied statement) a resolution, to be forwarded to the Minister for Justice, was passed, protesting against the recent increases in exemptions and licence duty. Last year the Christmas Exemption duty advanced from 10/- to £3. Recently the ordinary beer and spirit licence was trebled.

The result of the former was that the number of applicants was almost negligible and it is almost certain that the yield from this duty did not increase. Since it has not served its purpose the Association has requested the Minister to reconsider the position for the coming Christmas.
