Bodies Of Victims Of Air Disaster To Be Embalmed

Many vessels today continued the search for bodies from the ill-fated Dutch airliner, “Hugo de Groot,” lost in the Atlantic yesterday morning. So far thirty-two bodies have been recovered.

The airliner was on a flight from Amsterdam to New York, via Shannon and Gander. Its last message was received at Shannon 65 minutes after it took off at 4 a.m., military and civilian aircraft, lifeboats, passenger ships, luxury liner, Caronia, and the Italian four-masted training ship, Amerigo Vespucci, dashed to the search area after an RAF patrol plane, which had been in the air for nine hours after the “plane left Shannon. All on board, a total of 99 passengers, had perished.

RECOVERED BODIES GOING TO GALWAY.

At the time of going to press, two fishing trawlers have entered Galway Bay on their way to Galway Harbour with bodies recovered from the Atlantic about 80 to 100 miles out from Sculkey Head, on the Wexford coast, just north of the Cliffs of Moher.

So far 30 bodies have been recovered, but the flecking hope that somebody among the 99 on board, in the event of the death crash, has now faded in the light of the latest information.

Of the 20 vessels patrolling the area, eight are of the new Dutch air liner that had a crew of eight, two American and one French and the Irish Line, and the Wexford are among those who have sighted Galway port with the return of some of the vessels.

The vessels at the scene are working under the direction of the Canadian authorities, who changed her course from Portland to Galway. This would add 500 miles away.

INVESTIGATORS ARRIVE FROM HOLLAND.

A team of medical specialists and investigators from Holland arrived at Shannon this morning. Before leaving, they will examine the wreckage and the bodies in an effort to find a cause for the tragic tragedy.

The wreck, which was marked last night by flares from two hundred feet above, was on a flight from Portland to Galway. The bodies recovered from the scene included two American and one Frenchman.

The area of wreckage was said to be about a square mile. We felt any of the bodies were being washed over the scene.

We covered the area fairly closely and we saw a lot of blood and nothing more of the fuselage or wings. We saw the ships picking up the bodies.

BODIES TO BE EMBALMED.

A Galway message says that the Dutch and American authorities have arranged for the bodies to be brought to Galway, to be embalmed and suitably
