Dublin was suffering from a swelled head, and were now trying to administer the local affairs of the country. The Dail would be well advised to leave the County Councils alone, and to do something that would be for the good of the country.

ELDERLY MAN'S DEATH

Unusual Tragedy

A man named John Keyes, of Holy Cross, Kilmallock, was found dying inside a ditch, some distance from his home, yesterday morning, and succumbed to his injuries later.

It appears that the deceased fell on some stones and cut himself. He was lying out all night, and when found in the morning was suffering from loss of blood.

900 YEARS B.C.

Interesting Excavations in Co. Limerick

The site of the excavations at Cush, Co. Limerick, consisted of a group of earthworks which were important because at once typical and unique, and the burials provided evidence which dated the occupation of the site to the period 900 B.C. to 1,000 A.D., said Dr. Sean P. O Riordain, Professor of Archaeology, University College, Cork, in a paper read at the State General Meeting of the Royal Irish Academy, Dawson St., Dublin.

The site gave the earliest definite dating yet available for monuments—ring-forts and souterrains, while its ancient fields demonstrated the essential con-

LIMERICK TRAGEDY

Youth Killed on Road

Overtaken Car

An 18 years old farm labourer, named Patrick McNamara, of Adare, was killed instantly, when struck by a motor car at Raheen yesterday afternoon.

The unfortunate youth was cycling out from the city with a companion. A motor car, containing the driver and one passenger, came along behind.

Details of what actually occurred are vague, but it is stated that in swerving to avoid the cyclist, the car mounted the ditch and turned over, crushing the young man underneath.

He died within a few minutes, and the body was removed to Limerick County Infirmary.

The occupants of the car escaped without injury.

Dr. Murnane-Power, Coroner for East Limerick, opened and adjourned an inquest held at the County Courthouse this evening touching the death of the deceased.

Evidence of identification and medical evidence was given, and the enquiry adjourned, on the application of the authorities.
