WATERFORD CO-OPERATIVE DAIRY SOCIETY.

A meeting of the directors was held on Monday evening for the purpose of expressing their sympathy with the family of the late Mr W. J. Roche. His death has created a vacancy in the management, and it was the unanimous opinion of the directors that it would be difficult, if not impossible, to find a man of the same business capacity, and wide social acquaintance, as the late Mr Roche, in this its first year of operation. Mr J. P. McDonnell proposed, and Mr Patrick O'Donnell seconded:—"That on behalf of the directors, and in the name of the family, our heartfelt sympathy and condolence be expressed to the great affliction which it has caused to the family of the late Mr Roche, and to the great affliction which it has caused to the family of the late Mr Roche, and to the great affliction which it has caused to the family of the late Mr Roche." It was passed unanimously.

FINUCANE, M.P. ROBBED.

At the Prison House, London, to-day, Thomas Finucane, aged 22, a confectioner, was charged with being concerned with another man not in custody in dealing from Mr John Finucane, M.P. Mr Finucane said that at about 10 o'clock on Sunday night he was walking along Ludgate-circus. He saw another man who had escaped from the Prison House, and he laid his hands on his shoulder and pushed against him. He saw the other man was pulling at his chain and wrenched it off. The other man ran away in different direction. He followed the prisoner, and called "Police!" The prisoner was taken into custody. He saw the value of his watch chain and locket. He saw Frederick James Moon, a grocer, and he heard a cry of "Police!" and another man not in custody with the prosecutor. They both ran. The prosecutor shouted "Police!" and gave chase to the prisoner and stopped a police-constable said he took the prisoner into custody. The prisoner said he was taken away because he did not want to go into custody for disorderly conduct and the prisoner now said he was very

NOTICE TO LADIES.—I am still selling at greatly on the question whether the case is murder or a case of manslaughter, a reason I venture to make some observations upon it. I shall mention the facts as they appear upon the informations, so far as necessary, to enable you to follow what I observe to you in the matter of law. A man is charged with having taken a man in the same employment as himself, a boatman—on the night of the 26th of December, 1891. There is some evidence in the depositions that there had been some quarrel before the boat on which they were left. The crime was committed, at the journey, at Killaloe, and it appears probably both men concerned—both the man who lost his life and the man now charged with the crime—been the cause of it—as well as several other men on the boat had been indulgent. Ultimately, some occurrence took place which resulted in the man who lost his life receiving severe wounds on the head, of which he died the following day. Now, if you are satisfied that there was provocation, or that there was such hot blood in the man who reduced the murder below the crime of manslaughter, it would be your privilege to find a bill for manslaughter and not find a bill for murder. But as I have already told you, the man upon the person charged, in the first instance, has the obligation of reducing the offence. I ask you to look carefully into the facts, and form your own judgment as to whether a petty jury would be justified, upon the facts before you, in finding a verdict of manslaughter if no further evidence were given. I think a petty jury would be so justified on the facts before you, it would be your duty to find a verdict of manslaughter, but if you come to the conclusion that a petty jury would not be justified in finding that any higher crime than manslaughter had been committed, you will find a bill for murder and ignore the bill for manslaughter. I presume these cases will be investigated by the county of the city of Cork, and they have been sent. As you are aware, the judges are furnished with a statement of the constabulary with a statement of the number of cases of crime, both undetected, and I am sorry to say, returned for the county of Clare before me, no encouraging feature whatever. There are 124 cases specially reported since the beginning of the year, and the total for the corresponding period, the total is 100. Of minor offences not specially reported every single instance there is an increase in common assaults and in cases of intoxication and vagrancy. Increases are small in number, but it is unimportant in character, but it is in the specially reported cases which make the observation I have made, that there is nothing to be seen in the return. I have seen cases of murder—one of them, the case to which I have already referred, therefore more probably would be returned should not appear in that return. There are seven cases of firing at the person, and 13 cases of killing and maiming, some of which are marked by circumstances of great brutality. There are seven cases of malicious injury, and four cases of assault, as to one of which I am glad to see in the return that it has been prosecuted and condign punishment of five years servitude inflicted on those found guilty. There are four cases of assaulting a woman and eight cases of intimidation—I
