athletic sports were held in the square, and a simple, but admirably arranged programme, consisting of thirteen events, was gone through. There was a large and fashionable attendance on the invitation of Lieut-Colonel Mallins and officers of the Royal Artillery, and the proceedings, which were thoroughly enjoyable, were enhanced by the presence of the splendid band of the Black Watch, which discoursed some admirable selections. The success of the undertaking was due in a large measure to the efforts of Major Buckle, who is ever desirous of making everything as comfortable as possible for visitors. The names of the winners of the events, and the list of invitations will be published in our next issue.
