We have been favoured by Messrs White, Budd and Company, Dungarvon, with a package of their "Extra Refined Irish Table Salt," packed in patent folding card-board boxes. The idea of supplying fine table salt to householders in this convenient fashion is an exceedingly good, as well as an original one, as it keeps it clean and free from dust. The quality of the salt is very superior; it is clear as crystal, and beautifully fine. It certainly commends itself to the public, and we have no doubt the public will respond.

We regret exceedingly that a rumour which was in circulation through the city on Thursday last to the effect that Dr Elmes had breathed his last, received further circulation in our issue of that evening. The statement, we understand, originated in Dr Elmes having had a very serious fit, and as a natural result we hastened to express our sincere regret, as well as that of our fellow-citizens upon the event. We are glad to be informed this evening by Dr Myles that the invalid is now much better, and that all present danger is past.

The prospectus of the Borough of Portsmouth (Kingston, Fratton and Southsea) Tramways Company will be found in another column. In view of the high esteem in which this class of investment is held, and the favourable prospects of the line, it is worthy of the consideration of those having money to invest. The contractor, it will be perceived, guarantees 6 per cent for two years, ending 30th June, 1887. The line will be completed next month. The list of applications for shares in the company will be closed on Wednesday next, 22nd inst., for London, and on Thursday, 23rd inst., for the country.

The Young Ireland Society in Rathkeale does not seem to be so popular an institution as the promoters of it would desire. For some time past the society and the National League have not been on friendly terms, though the cause of their disagreement has not been very clearly explained. A few mornings since the board affixed outside the society rooms, on which was inscribed the name of the society, was found daubed over with dirty paint, and the lettering completely obliterated. The "Young Irelanders" are naturally highly indignant at the outrage committed upon them, but no clue is forthcoming as to the perpetrator of it.

Our Kildysart correspondent says.—A lamentable story has just been related by a cattle-dealer from Limerick. He says that on Tuesday morning he deposited £700 in the Munster Bank, in their own individual interest of other people who were Munster Bank. Therefore opinion of that meeting and arrived at would have the of the county and city of Limerick in his opening statement position of the Bank. I that the Mayor should call give expression to the same expression in Cork and Dublin was such a consensus of feeling was so unanimous a conviction country that the Bank should at present (hear, hear). The him to propose certain resolutions not think he could do better lution after resolution and i ments he thought necessary first resolution was as follows shareholders, customers and Munster Bank in the city declare our entire confidence Bank, and express our confidence present crisis is entirely owing was sure the Munster Bank confidence (hear, hear) by reason, and the admirable management business had been conducted the South of Ireland, they had and civility in the Munster not found before that branch (hear, hear). They knew the branch in Cork, no fault what in the management of the bank over the bank was entirely ment at the headquarters, this distance had no connection second part of the resolution sent crisis was simply owing the fact. They knew the bank were thoroughly inspected found to be quite sound; but districts, where people were i broke out amongst their reasoning with that feeling country town where £45, and in a week's time it felt second resolution was as follows.
