

would a cruel and an unchristian act to turn helpless women and children out in the streets without a rag to cover them, or a morsel to put into their mouths, merely on the supposition that the husband was employed, and therefore, and under all the circumstances I oppose that portion of the report which recommends that able bodied paupers, of both sexes, or women and children be turned out until employment can be had for them (hear, hear).

Mr. Cregan—There is one part of the statement made by Mr. Myles which is not strictly accurate. When I attended on the committee I spoke as a young guardian, and I expressed surprise on seeing so many able bodied paupers in the house, and on speaking on the subject to the master I said that I thought it would be the duty of every Guardian who could give those men employment to give it, and I added that in about a month I would have it in my power to give it to a few men, upon which Mr. Myles, who was present, threw up his hands and said, "you were very foolish to make that statement, for you will have people running about you," and then he applied to have that mere observation of mine put on the book, to which I objected, as I did not think it proper that a private remark should be made, a public record, but Mr. Myles persisted in order to make what is called "capital" out of it.

Mr. Myles—When that conversation took place in the stone-breakers yard—

Mr. Clancy—Mr. Chairman, this discussion is quite out of order.

Chairman—Here is the entry—"That the master discharge any of those men to whom Mr. Cregan can give employment."

Mr. Cregan—It was not fair to put that there at all.

Chairman—I don't think it was fair.
Mr. John Browne—Really Mr. Myles did not act fairly in this matter. He told me that he was not on the committee at all as he would not have his windows broken, which most assuredly would be the case if he had any hand in making that order (hear, hear.)

Mr. Carroll—I agree with Mr. Brown; a great many people have been let into the house on what I will call "small sympathy," the children ought not be here, neither ought the women be here, and the guardians ought to discharge themselves of that feeling which induce them to seek popularity (hear, hear). I am sorry indeed to hear that Mr. Myles should act in this way, to save his windows by wronging his conscience (hear, hear).

Dr. Parker—The duty of the guardians is to protect the poor, and also the ratepayers; and so long as I am a guardian, I will discharge my duty towards both; but I will not protect the poor at the expense of the ratepayers.

The Chairman then put the report, which was carried, except that portion of it which related to the private and casual observation of Mr. Cregan, which was expunged.

FEMALE EMIGRANTS.

The report recommended that five young girls, inmates of the house, receive assistance to emigrate to America, and that they be forwarded to their friends per the Jessie from this port. A long discussion took place as to whether one of the girls named Anne Meagher, was to receive assistance or not. Mr. Carroll opposed it on the ground that she had been in a situation for two years, at £5 a year, and could have remained in it if she liked.

Mr. Goggin supported the recommendation, on the ground that it took but £5 from the rates, whereas it might take £60 to support the girl in the house, in which she had been reared.

Mr. Carroll suggested the probability of all the young girls in the country leaving their places, when they had Mr. Goggin to advocate their emigrating mania (hear, hear).

Mr. Goggin said a report had gone through the country that Mr. Carroll was sending out 500 girls to America, and all the females in one district he was acquainted with was preparing to be off, but when they found that the number dwindled down to 5, they settled down again, so that there was no fear of their coming into the house as a step towards emigration.

After some further remarks, the report was put, and Mr. Carroll having at the request of the Chairman withdrew his opposition, it was unanimously carried.
