ANTHONY T. LUCAS,
(1911-1986)

A few short days before Easter 1986, on the 26th of March, Dr. A. T. Lucas, former Director of the National Museum of Ireland (1954-76) and scholar supreme, passed on from an honoured place among us mortals to take his well-earned place among the immortals. Although primarily a Dubliner, his immediate ancestry was rural Irish (his mother was from Nobber, Co. Meath) and foreign (his father was from near Graz, Austria), factors which gave him both an all-Ireland and an international outlook on the world around him. His interest in North Munster was no less than that of any part of Ireland—indeed, he was not only a member of our Society for over twenty years but lectured to us on a few occasions, most recently (17/4/1984) on “Relics and Reliquaries in Irish Tradition”, since published in J. Roy. Soc. Antiq. Ireland, 116(1986), 5-37. During his lifetime his published oeuvre included a book on the Treasures of Ireland (reviewed in our Journal, see below), a lengthy monograph on Furze: A Survey and History of Its Uses in Ireland published in Béaloideas, 26(1958), 1-203 and which was republished in book form in 1960, and over a hundred scholarly papers and book reviews, of varying lengths but almost all of major academic importance. It is of interest to note that not only did he publish some sixteen times in our Journal (see list below) but both the first and the last papers he ever wrote were published with us. True, his magnum opus, not a paper but a book, has still to appear. Two days before he died he finished correcting the typescript and it was only on the morning of that final day that he settled on its title: Cattle in Ancient Ireland. Many members will perhaps remember his fascinating lecture on “Ancient Cattle-Keeping Customs” which he gave us in December 1970, a lecture which included much to be covered in the forthcoming book and which we then Hon. Secretary, the late Tom Pierce, rightly described as “undoubtedly one of the most interesting and important heard by the Society for many years”.

Dr. Lucas’ work reaped many rewards. Not only did he obtain the initial B.A. and subsequent M.A. in U.C.D., but in 1961 he received a D. Litt. from the National University of Ireland which further honoured him with the award of a D. Litt. Celt. (honoris causa) in 1979. Another honorary title of which he was also very proud was that of Honorary Fellow of the Society of Antiquaries of Scotland which was awarded him in November 1968 “In Recognition of Distinguished Services to Archaeology”. He also was elected President of various learned Societies, most importantly, perhaps, to the Presidency of the Royal Society of Antiquaries of Ireland from 1969 to 1973, a Society with which his name had been virtually synonymous since 1946 when he had become its Hon. Gen. Secretary. That Society further showed its appreciation of his scholarship in 1976 when it published a major festschrift called Folk and Farm (edited by our member, Caoimhin Ó Danachair) in his honour. But it is by his own work that he will be remembered, by publications ranging across almost every activity of man from earliest times to the present day, including ploughing, trapping and snaring, washing and bathing, hair hurling-balls, dug-out canoes, souterrains, vernacular houses, bog-roads, straw-rope granaries, shoes, sacred trees, horse-hair fishing lines, famine and pre-potato food, bog-wood, block-wheeled vehicles, sweat-houses, Penal Crucifixes, etc., etc., etc. He also published important archaeological and historical papers, including the above-mentioned book on the Treasures of Ireland and the paper he wrote for North Munster Studies (see below). Republication of Dr. Lucas’ papers in collected format is being discussed and will, we hope, soon materialise. Meanwhile let us all be grateful for having known him and for benefitting so greatly from his wide knowledge.

I measc na sain-eolaithe eile aí imithe roimhe, ag plé gnáth-rudaí na seanaimísire leo agus ag cómhá lena mhuintir agus le cuidhe a oíge, go raibh a anam macánta i gcónaí.

The following is a list of Dr. A. T. Lucas’ publications in the North Munster Antiquarian Journal:

Dr. Lucas also contributed a major paper, almost 50 pages in length, on "The Plundering and Burning of Churches in Ireland, 7th to 16th Century" to North Munster Studies: Essays in Commemoration of Monsignor Michael Moloney (edited by E. Rynne), which was published by this Society in 1967.

The following two relevant reviews also appeared in this Journal:

EDWARD A. MacLYSAGHT, M.A., D.Litt., LL.D. (Honoris Causa), M.R.I.A.
(1887-1986)

A standard type of obituary, listing the main events and achievements of the deceased’s life, is not really necessary for the late Dr. Edward Maclysaght—and, furthermore, would take up more space than is available here. Indeed, interested readers are referred for such relevant information to the two autobiographical books he published in 1978 and the autobiographical article which appeared in 1979 (see below), the biographical memoir which we understand is being prepared by Charles Lysaght and shortly to be published by the National Library, the various newspaper articles dealing with him in The Irish Times (e.g. 25/5/1970, 8/10/1973, 7/2/1978, 23/1/1980 and 8/3/1986), the Irish Press (e.g. a memoir of his time on the first Senate of 1923-25, published in January 1983), and elsewhere, and, of course, to the introductory contributions in “Féilseirbhinn Éamoinn Mhic Giolla Iasachta”, vol. XVII of this Journal, published in his honour in 1975. Suffice to remind ourselves that ‘Mac’ was the longest-serving link with our past: he bridged the ten-year gap between the discontinuation of the North Munster Archaeological Society in 1919 and the restarting of antiquarian and historical research in our area with the Thomond Archaeological Society in 1929; he was elected a Vice-President of the Society in 1971 and an Honorary Life Member in 1973.

Dr. MacLysaght lived a long and productive life. For over ten years before his demise he had not only been telling people but actually putting in print that whichever was his most recent publication was “positively the last” or “definitely the final volume”, but he continued to work and to publish new or revised/enlarged material up to within a few months of his death. Indeed, he seemed to be virtually indestructible, which explains and is typified by one of the many amusing stories told about him, perhaps even apocryphal but none the worse—or less true—for that: at the age of 92 shortly after an operation for an artificial hip he was seen bounding up the stairs of the National Library as sprightly and lively as ever—only to become very worried and dejected when a ‘friend’ reprimanded him and told him that such hip replacements generally lasted only ten years!

Ever an idealist, optimism, a faith in the future and hard work kept him going. Indeed, this attitude was summed up for me when I rang him on his 98th birthday (6th November 1985) and his first comment over the telephone was an excited “Two to go! Two to go!” No wonder, then, that on hearing his unexpected and rather sudden death announced on the late night news from Radio Éireann, on the 4th of March, 1986, my immediate comment to my wife was a blurted “It will kill him not to have made the hundred!” And wouldn’t he have enjoyed receiving the standard gratuity from his friend and fellow Clareman, Dr. Patrick Hillery, Uachtarán na hÉireann?

Ireland’s most noted genealogist, he traced his own family through many centuries and generations, showing them to have migrated often but to have begun and ended in Co. Clare. Originally from Kilshanny, near Kilfenora, one of his ancestors then moved to Limerick in the late 15th century, where he set up as a goldsmith. The family seems to have moved further around Co. Limerick before being transplanted back to Clare during the mid-17th century Cromwellian Transplantations, but this time to Ballymarkaham, near Quin, in the south-east rather than the north-west of the county. Later on his great-great-great-grandfather, William Lysaght, emigrated to Portugal for a while, but returned to Ireland about 1750, settling the family at Hazelwood, between Mallow and Doneraile, Co. Cork. Then, in 1908, his father, S. R. Lysaght, himself a poet and author, acquired a fine house and land at Raheen, near Tuamgraney, in east Clare, and there the family still resides.
His own life also involved much travel. At various times he either lived in or travelled to such places as England, Wales, France, South Africa, Australia, Japan, America, and no doubt elsewhere too. But Ireland and, more particular, Clare, kept calling him back, and back he came.

A many-faceted man, he can be described as being, or having at one time or another been, a farmer, horticulturalist/nurseryman (our last meeting was in late 1985, he coming from working on potted seedlings, with earth and weeds still adhering to his hands), lecturer, writer, poet, novelist, historian, genealogist, librarian, nationalist, Gaelic League, Senator, sportsman (rugby at school, played golf off a 5 handicap, and even played cricket for Co. Clare—once!), but perhaps those who knew him best will remember him as a friend, a letter-writer and conversationalist, a mine of interesting tales and knowledge, and as a whole lot more besides.

Of course, many would consider him as a bit of an eccentric and certainly idiosyncratic in many ways: about his age, for instance (it varied at certain stages of his life, notably before and after his official retirement—depending on whether he was being proud of his seeming youth or of his well-earned seniority!), about his birthplace (‘‘born at sea and baptised in the Parish of Tuamgraney’’ is the entry in Who’s Who), about his home (officially Raheen, Tuamgraney, but he generally resided elsewhere—mostly Co. Dublin), his name (Edward, Éamonn, Mac, Ned, Anthony; Lysaght, MacLysaght, Mac Giolla Iasachta; even ‘‘Jim Hogan’’ for a while when working on a Somerset farm after being sent down from Oxford), about his wives’ names (Mabel/Maureen; Mary Frances/Mamie), about his ‘‘first’’ language (English, of course, but he preferred Irish, wrote books, articles and his diaries in Irish, generally spoke Irish while in the Senate, and even tried to create a nua-Ghaeltacht at Raheen in or about 1917). And so on… but always there seems to have been an acceptable if not necessarily totally sound reason for such apparent contradictions. He was, indeed, a ‘‘real character’’, one whom it was a privilege to have known. Truly the description of him as ‘‘one of the great ‘Worthies of Thomond’’’ [T. P. O’Neill, this Journal, 27(1985), 101] is a valid one. I bhFliathas Dé, i measg a shean-cháirde, a shinseir féin agus i láthair iar-scoláirí na hÉireann, go raibh a anam dílis.

The late Dr. MacLysaght did not keep a full list of his published work, a matter which created great difficulties in compiling that published in ‘‘Féilsgríbhinn Éamonn Mhic Giolla Iasachta’’ (pp. 7-11). Since then that compilation has been added to and some of the publications listed in it have been revised and republished; the following is an attempt to bring it up to date; reviews in learned journals are still being omitted from the list, except for the two he published in our Journal; also being included in his own (but edited) contribution to the Féilsgríbhinn, and a list of the reviews of his books which appeared in our Journal — si monumentum requiris, circumspice.
