Priests of the Diocese of Limerick 1878-1917

Matthew Tobin *

This list of priests has been primarily compiled from the archives of the Diocese of Limerick, which has a comprehensive list of the parishes where its priests served from around 1860 onwards. Where information was missing, the Irish Catholic Directory was utilised to assist in compiling the priests' careers. In the case of priests who served in other dioceses or religious orders, the relevant body in each case was contacted to establish the extent, if any, of their records. I have also used a number of books that chronicle the careers of Irish priests, for instance Canning’s Irish-Born Secular Priests in Scotland 1829-1979 and Hamell’s two works on the students who attended St Patrick’s College in Maynooth. These books along with the student registers in the Irish College in Rome and the Russell Library in St Patrick’s College, Maynooth proved invaluable in assembling this list. The local newspapers of the time and information gathered from other books form the remainder of sources used. However a number of gaps still remained in some priests’ careers, many of which were filled in by information received from Bishop John Fleming of Killala. However there are still periods of some priest’s careers which remain blank and this is detailed as ‘unknown’. The date and place of ordination or date of death for some priests could not be found.

There were over 100 secular priests in the diocese at any one time during this period. The figure remained consistent throughout: in 1879 the number was 110 while in 1918 it was 111.¹ There were forty-eight parishes in the diocese.² Most parishes had two priests, a parish priest and a curate but the city parishes like St John’s and St Michael’s (which had administrators rather than parish priests as they were directly under the bishop’s control) had at times up to six curates. This was due to the larger population and also to serve the religious needs of the local schools, religious orders, workhouses, and prisons. The larger rural parishes like Kilmallock, Bruff, Newcastlewest, Glin, Shanagolden and Rathkeale also had a second and sometimes a third curate due to the workload in these rural towns and their hinterland.

St Patrick’s College, Maynooth was the primary institution for the training of young seminarians for the Limerick diocese during this period with at least one hundred and eighty nine seminarians receiving all or part of their training within its walls. A number of Limerick students still travelled to Continental Europe to receive their education and the Irish College in Rome educated at least forty-three students who were ordained for the diocese. When the Rectorship of the college was granted to the Limerick priest Mgr Dr Michael O’Riordan in 1905, the diocese supported the college by consistently sending some candidates for the priesthood to receive their education in the Eternal City. The third main destination for Limerick seminarians was the Irish College in Paris where twenty-three students received some or all of their education. The diocese tried to support the college by having at least one student there at any one time from around 1860 onwards.³

Limerick clergy generally fitted the norm as their average age of ordination was twenty-five.⁴ When Thomas Wall was ordained in 1901 at the age of twenty-three he had to receive a dispensation from Dr O’Dwyer as he was under the permitted age of ordination of twenty-four. When these priests began their pastoral careers as curates, they were ranked as junior curates. This ranking system existed in the large city parishes and rural towns where more than one curate was stationed in a parish. Over time the junior curate progressed to become a senior curate in a parish and after this, the next step was promotion to the duties of a parish priest. Curates did not become parish priests until they were in their mid-forties at the earliest. However there was no guarantee that after two decades as a curate they would be handed the responsible of running a parish and the careers of the brothers Mortimer and James McCoy are an example of this. Mortimer spent forty-one years as a curate in eight different parishes and was at the advanced age of sixty-eight when he was finally appointed as a parish priest in Ardpatick. From the Limerick archive there is no evidence to suggest that Mortimer was either troublesome or suffered from ill health. His brother James was only twelve years in the ministry in two different parishes when he was appointed as administrator of St John’s parish in the city. This shows that some curates were marked out for promotion from an early stage in their ministry, but whether it was due to a brilliant scholarly career, influence with the right people or hard work is difficult to ascertain. However, the Limerick diocese was in line with the general pattern in Ireland at this period as established by Larkin, as a priest of the diocese was, on average, a curate for seventeen years.

While curates were always liable to be transferred because of diocesan needs by the bishop or because of friction with their parish priest, some were subject to frequent changes. The Rev Michael Mulcahy was one such example of the haphazard nature that a curate’s career might follow. Mulcahy was ordained in 1874 and in the first ten years of his career, had worked in at least ten parishes in three different dioceses. Possibly as a result of his changing schedule, Mulcahy experienced health problems during this period of time. The Rev Patrick Carroll worked in four different parishes as a temporary curate between August 1911 and May 1912 before he gained a permanent post as curate in St Munchin’s parish. These examples though are the exception to the rule as priests ministered in an average of four parishes during their time as a curate.

When a curate had served his apprenticeship, he was then promoted to parish priest usually around the time of his fiftieth birthday. Again one should remember that this was not invariably true as the example of Mortimer McCoy shows. Parish priests had the advantages of financially security, the ability to delegate jobs that they disliked to their curate(s) along with power and a greater measure of influence in the local community. The position of parish priest ended the likelihood that the clergyman would be moved to a new parish at short notice and this is highlighted by the fact that a parish priest on average served in only two parishes. The normal tenure for a parish priest was twenty-two years. Both the Revs Thomas Downes and William Higgins surpassed the average career of a parish priest and the average age that a priest died at of sixty-seven. Downes was parish priest of Kilmallock for forty-nine years and in his late seventies, he travelled to America to fundraise for the new church that was been built in the town. Higgins died at the age of eighty in February 1917 after twenty-seven years as parish priest. As most parish priests were advanced in years and possibly

5 LDA, Papers of Dr O'Dwyer, File 30, Mgr M. Kelly to Rev Andrew Murphy, 23 July 1901. According to the diocesan records and the student registers in Maynooth and Rome, at least nineteen priests whose age of ordination was found were ordained at the age of 22 or 23. It may be possible that the date of ordination was incorrect in some cases.
7 The career of two hundred and sixty five priests was used to calculate the mean time as a curate. See also Larkin, The Home Rule Movement, p. 107.
8 The careers of two hundred parish priests were used to determine this average.
9 This figure was arrived at after the age of death for two hundred and nine priests was found.
in poor health, they often remained in the same parish until their death. It was also more difficult for the bishop to transfer a parish priest or indeed to retire him as will be shown later.

Of the two hundred and seventy four priests in this survey, only two hundred became parish priests. Twenty priests died before they had acquired enough experience to become a parish priest. Ill health was another major factor that prevented at least seventeen priests from becoming parish priest. A third factor was that a number of priests who were ordained for the diocese became affiliated to another diocese like John Glesson did.

Some historians have argued that the Roman Catholic clergy were mainly drawn from the class of the tenant farmers of Ireland in the nineteenth century. Furthermore Seán Connolly maintained that due to the expense of entering a seminary to study for the priesthood, the majority of Ireland’s future clergy were the ‘sons of substantial tenants farmers or of the lower middle and middle classes of the towns and cities. Even in 1962 this belief was still prevalent as the Limerick Rural Survey noted the belief that ‘the priest comes from the strong farming class and that he favours these classes’.

In this study, an attempt to find the birthplace of each priest was made but this was only possible for 170 priests, which is sixty two per cent of the total number of priests. On looking at this map a number of conclusions can be drawn. Firstly the majority of the priests came from rural parts of the diocese. Only twenty of the 170 priests came from one of the five city parishes, which represented twelve per cent of the known total of priests. The map can be further analysed to show that the parishes east of a line from Donaghmore to Dromcollogher was where more than half of the priests came from. Part of this area is the fertile farming region called the Golden Vale and would suggest that most of these priests were born in parishes that had good agricultural land and a strong farming tradition.

The number of priests west of this imaginary line from Donaghmore to Dromcollogher was then less than half of the total number of priests. This land area constitutes more than half of the total land area of the diocese and farms were of a smaller size than in the east of the diocese, allied with a poorer quality of soil. This statistic would support the theory that the clergy mainly came from areas where the underlying soil was of such quality that intensive farming could be carried out. Of course, the conclusions drawn from these figures have to be taken with some caution as if the remaining priests’ birthplaces could be found; it could produce a different set of results. There is also no indication of what size of farm these priests grew up on, if indeed they were the sons of farmers as there is no certainty that because they came from rural areas, their fathers were farmers. No sources were available for the Diocese of Limerick in this period to determine the precise social origins of the clergy.

Dromin/Athlacca          Bruree/Rockhill
Shanagolden/Foynes

The names of parishes have been abbreviated on the basis of where the parish priest resided. Colmanswell was a separate parish from 1860 to 1892 when it was united with Ballyagran to form Ballyagran/Colmanswell. Kilfinane & Ardpatrick was a single parish until 1861 when it was divided into two, as was Fedamore & Manister 1858 when they it was divided into two separate parishes. Begley (vol. iii p.624) is incorrect in inferring that Manister was a separate parish in 1851. Stonehall is the older name of the parish of Kilcorman, both terms were used during this period and for the sake of consistency, Stonehall is given. Mahoonagh is the name of the parish that encompasses the villages and area around Castlemahon and Feohanagh.

Fr Nolan retired temporarily from the priesthood due to illness on 3 October 1879.
After a retreat in Dublin and a fortnight with the Trappist Community in Roscrea, he returned to the priesthood under the restriction that he had to maintain ‘total abstinence’ and if Nolan broke this mandate, he would be expelled from the priesthood.
Banogue
        22 Nov 1879 – Mar 1880  Curate
Fr Nolan broke his mandate in March 1880 and was sent to Franciscan Fathers and then entered the Redemptorists and spent some time in Cork and Kilkee. Fr Nolan looked for and received his excarnation from the diocese on 19 April 1880.
Ordained on 17 March 1861. Died on 15 October 1882 in London.

³⁹² Even though there is no record of Fr McNamara becoming curate in Newcastlewest on his return from Plymouth, it seems likely that he did take up the post in or around this time.

\(^{551}\) There is some confusion about which parish Fr Russell served in after his transfer from Dromcolloagher. The Irish Catholic Directory of 1887 states that Fr Russell left the parish in 1887 while Bishop Fleming's records states that Fr Russell was in Scotland in 1887. The above version is what is given in the Limerick archive.

In America collecting for a new church 31 Mar 1894 – 3 June 1903*
Bruree 1903 – 1908 Parish Priest
In 1907, Fr Sheehy left the parish without any permission to do so and he did not return to the parish nor did he try to seek to lift the sanctions that had been placed on him, which resulted in his suspension from the priesthood.
Ordained on 12 July 1868. Died on 15 July 1917 aged 76.
* While collecting for Bruree’s new church, his speeches were more political than religion.
^ In the Irish Catholic Directory of 1875, p. 184 the name is given as Denis Sheehy.
~ During his time in Kilmallock, Fr Sheehy was arrested and jailed for four months in 1881 under the Coercion Act. When he left prison, Sheehy was allowed a leave of absence from his mission on 27 September of that year.

Acknowledgements

Most Rev Donal Murray, Bishop of Limerick for granting me permission to use the archives of the diocese, without which this study would not have been possible. Rev Dr Michael Wall, Mary Immaculate College for his assistance with sources, contacts and Latin translations. Rev Charles Irwin, St Munchin’s College for allowing me access to the college library to source material for this work. Very Rev Donough O’Malley, PP St Mary’s for allowing me to look through his collection of the diocese’s magazine Our Catholic Life.

Most Rev Joseph Duffy, Bishop of Clogher for permission to look through the diocese’s archives in relation to the Limerick priests that served in Clogher. Most Rev John Fleming, Bishop of Killala for his invaluable and generous advice and information based on his own work on the priests of Limerick. Mgr Liam Bergin & Rev Albert McDonald, the Rector and Vice Rector of the Irish College in Rome for their permission to use the college’s archives and gracious help during my stay there.

To all the staff of the library in Mary Immaculate College but most especially those in the audiovisual section and Phyllis Conran for sourcing newspapers and theses in the inter-library loans department. To all the staff of the National Archives in Bishop St, Dublin for their valuable help and assistance.
above and beyond the call of duty. Dr Jerome Ann del Wiel, University of Rheims for assistance in sourcing material at the initial stage and Dr Liam Chambers, Mary Immaculate College for allowing me to use his files from the archives of the Irish College in Paris.

To Penny Woods & the staff of the Russell Library, St Patrick’s College, Maynooth for their help and permission to research material from the library.

To the many people who assisted me with information from dioceses worldwide: Lorraine Gall of the Archdiocese of Adelaide; Rachel Naughton of the Archdiocese of Melbourne; Deacon Jim Erskine and Rev Brian Dennis O’Connor of the Diocese of Sale; Olivia Delfs of the Diocese of Bathurst; Gloria Cutler & Dr Tom Boland of the Diocese of Brisbane and Sr Mary de Porres of the Archdiocese of Wellington. Judith M. Herdina of the Diocese of Winona, Minnesota; Jeffrey Burns of the Archdiocese of San Francisco; Patrick J. McNamara of the Diocese of Brooklyn; Fr Tom Zurcher of the Diocese of Phoenix, Arizona; Daniel P. Brosnan of the Diocese of Tucson, Arizona; Sr Kathryn Maney MS of the Diocese of Lincoln, Nebraska and Rev Fr Brian J. Price of the Archdiocese of Kingston in Canada. Robin Gard of the Diocese of Hexham & Newcastle; David Smallwood of the Diocese of Middlesborough; Rev Francis P. Isherwood of the Diocese of Portsmouth; Robert Finnigan of the Diocese of Leeds; Rev Dickie of the Archdiocese of Westminster; Dave Lannon for information from the archives of the Diocese of Bradford and the Archdiocese of Liverpool and Brian Plumb for information on the Limerick priests who served time in Liverpool. Fergus O’Donoghue SJ of the Irish Jesuit Archives in Dublin; Jacques Monet SJ of the Upper Canada Province of Jesuits; Andrew O’Loughlin of the Passionist Fathers in Dublin; Br Seamus Campion of the Redemptorist Fathers at Mount St Alphonsus in Limerick and Peadar Murnane of the Diocese of Clogher.

I am indebted to Liam Irwin for his advice, help and guidance.
