

Richard Dickson Power. Power for assault, and Mr Murphy the complainant. He said—I have I consider a most brutal outrage, Power on Mr. Hartigan. It appeared Mr. Hartigan a considerable long time; Mr. Hartigan was the payment of that sum, as he to him recently for the amount. Mr Power proceeded to Mr Hartigan of Limerick, armed with a sword to the account which was Mr. Hartigan, and he said he for monies which he paid, and he in particular, of £14, which he for which he said he had not got characterised the account as a robbing tigan, although he felt indignant, word, but called on his clerk, Mr. the account. Mr Dundon did as nstrated to Mr. Power that the which he referred had been paid Power. Mr Hartigan, who natu- then said to Mr. Power, "you see he you told in charging me with th a robbing account." At once a large bludgeon and made a furious of Mr Hartigan, who was at another the office. Mr. Hartigan put up y the time the blow reached his effect which perhaps Mr. Power Mr. Dundon interfered, and Mr ous blow at him, which, if he re- vent him from appearing there to he would do. Now, gentlemen, I that such an outrage as this can- ed with impunity in the city of n was then examined. He stated me to his office and said something being credited to him, and that he account as a robbing transaction," while said it was a lie for him to as a robbing one; Mr. Power then h his stick in the manner described

The dispute was about an item of to a horse called "Paddy" from er had paid £16 out of that, but he or the horse particularly, but against which was £30, or thereabouts; me that he sent me £14 by his obinson, who, he said, was dead; I at I made any sneering reply, in- ver's veracity as to Mrs. Robinson; t that £14 was paid; I said so; I he account a robbing account was a inson's name; I did not see a knife hand when he interfered; I heard out the knife, but I cannot say that a knife; I will not swear that he ore that he saw Mr. Hartigan and ing about the account in the office. something to which Mr. Power re-
