At any rate, the time has come when all hesitations should finally cesse, and when Irish Nationalists must make up their tion and dieaster or on that of constitutional. ism and success. " Each Irish Nationalist." says the Party manifesto, " has to put before himself these alternatives. We have no doubt what the choice of the Irish people will be. But PRACOCKE, 66, William. shall realise all the reforms and all the hopes we and our predecessors in the constitutional movement have held out to them ; we shall ead the Irish people into the Parliamen House for which they have been praying and working for more than a century." There is the issue in clear cut language, and we have not a shadow of doubt as to what the Irish people's answer will be to the appeal made to them by the responsible party and the responsible leaders of our nation and race. Physical force in this country has never achieved what it set out to accomplish, and the latest rising has not only been a hideeus failure, but has struck "a dangerous blow at the heart and hopes of Ireland." The constitutional movement.

on the other hand, " has not only won everything the programme of Butt, PARNELL, and the Irish organisations demanded, but a great deal more." What it has secured for our country is set out in the Irish Party manifesto. which, we trust, will be read carefully and with intelligent interest by all those to whom it is addressed. A good deal of what we think we are right in describing as trivial nonsense has been written and uttered during the past couple of years regarding Treland's attitude towards England and the war. It has been said that Mr REDMOND was false to the prin ciples of the leaders of the past when he advised the Irish people, now that they had Home Rule on the Statute Book and only awaiting the end of the great European conflict to automatically come into operation, to make peace with England and turn their attention from the bitterness of the past to the hopes of the future. Those who make such a grotesque charge know little of the lives or struggles or purposes of the men who lought and worked through what is, perhaps, the most glorious period of Ireland's struggles for her rights. The leaders of '48, if we judge them by their own utterances, would gladly endorse Mr REDMOND's present policy and attitude if they were with us to-day. - In an article on "Irish Ideals," In an early issue of The Nation, law," said the "Uncrowned King," " the Irish TROMAS DAVIS, who was at least as good and | people will cheerfully accept all the duties and as thoroughgoing an Irishman as the most | responsibilities assigned to them and will justly sincere and extreme of our present-day revointionaries, emphasized the possibility of the Imperial system." Well, Home Rule has future as ""peace with England; alliance been carried into law, and as Mr REDMOND Irish hopes, strength, virtues and rewards | they have been sincere in their fight and their for the Irish." Then again, GAVAN DUFFY, professions since the inauguration of the conat a moment when, as he bimself declared, a stitutional movement or not. The Irish Party

A representative of the Russkoya Blow obtained an interview with the husband of Countess Marklevicz, the Sinn Feln rebel. It appears that he is an artist and dramatist, and was at Durazzo at the outbreak of the war. Influenced by the Grand Duke Nicholas's manifesto to the Poles, he enlisted in the Russian Army, serving as a trooper in a hussar regiment. The Count, in the Carpathians, contracted typhoid fever, but recovered, and was discharged from further service owing to unfitness.

> Food Instead of Wages

At the port of Dublin during the recent insur rection some of the steamship companies who were shut off from their beaking resources for Famous Tenor's Offer ready casir distributed bacon, flour, tea, sugar and other groceries from their sheds instead o wages to their dockers. Careful accounts of these war-time arrangements were kept, so that in no case will any party be at a loss The measures adopted prevented famine in the nomes of hundreds of quay labourers.

Irishmen required no Computsory Service Bill to make them fit. What was wanted was a way to the hearts of the people, and when that was done this country would find it had the best troops in the world. What was poleoning the mind of Ireland was the secrecy of these military trials, and the continuance of executions. General Botha had to deal with a much more dangerous rebellion, and yet he executed only one man, and that was because that man, while wearing the King's uniform, accepted German money. The language used by the Home Secretary on the previous day at the National Club was scandalous. According to the information he had acquired there were very few sets of savagery and murder on the part of the insurgents. As fighting men their conduct was beyond reproach. They

Apologies for nen-attendance were received from Capt Donelan, and Mesers Hackett, O'Malley, Murphy, Young, The following statement was adopted :--Another tragedy has been added to the long tale of tragedies in Irish history. The capital of freigned has been the scene of a mad and unsecond of allowed at revolution. Blood has been shed freely, It is true that Ireland has their totally provided by the growth of a and ther posting of Ireland, backed by an army in revolt. It is true that a grave responsibility for these events in Dublin rests on the leaders of that movement. These things will have to be discussed at the proper time. It is true that Ireland has been shocked and horrifled by the series of milliary executions by military tribunals in Dublin. These things have been done in the face of the incessent and vehement protests of the Irish tinually and strongly until the unchecked controi of the military authorities in Ireland is abolished. But it is also to un that, lumpite of these bitter provocations the people of Ireland have no besitation in condenining the rising lo Dubile as a dangerous blow the heart and hopes of Ireland. the morrow of this tragedy we feel called upon to make a soleton appeal to the people of Ireland to draw the conclusions which these ev ntc force upon them. We must leave no misenderstanding in their minds as to our convictions and our resolves. Either Ireland is in the elses over to unsuccessful revolution and anarmy, in the operational movemen is to have the full support of the Irish people and go on till it has completed its work. We lay before the people of Ireland these atternatives, nec for the first time, Induced, except in certain small sections of the people, that alternative of a gestactiutional movement was chosen and adhered to for nearly half a century. After the revolutionary movement of the (Ber. d Mr W C Doherty, presiding, and Mr sixtles Issae Butt procisimed to the Irish propis that a constitutional movement was only sure and certain method of obtaining their rights. Parnell renewed that policy and that hope. The people of Ireland accepted that policy, and that policy has never been seriously questioned by the Irish people. What was the condition of Ireland when she ever extended to any city or town in England. was asked by Butt and Parnell to choose a constational moteur-ril! The land system remained in preschally the same position of rotrenched omnittotence as at any period of Irish history. The repants were the victims rents became impossible of payment-often even when they were paid the eviction notice was served. The country was blending from every pore with the emigration of periodical famine, threatening the horrors of the great famine of 1846, was always by placing on the Statute Book the greatest | bis duties most efficiently and with every atbear, In the years between 1877 and 1879 it was | and largest measure of brought close by a new faiture of the potato crop, which still stood as the thin and only partition between the majority of the Irigh people and hunger; and, as in 1846, the evictions fell like aton flakes, to quote the language of Mr Gladatone, all over the country. The landlerd garrison, which did these things, remained still in possession of every place of power. Thry had the two houses of the British l'arilament at then back. They had even the representatives of freland either with them or Impotent against them. The whole control of the local life of fredand was in their hands ; for no Irlah county had any other form of Government but the Grand Jury, and the Grand Jury was a communicies of landfords. -The landlurds held the men sterial tench; their membera or their oreatures filled the judicial offices; at their back was all the great us at and military as well as political forces of the Bitt-

a nation in ruins: Both Mr Killeen and himself could agree to wretched sablas, insufficient food, rags instead of decent clothing, and the terror and abject. ness of the slavery to the landled. The wages, without land, they were hopeless in the present and the future. Beyond all this, the vision, which has beanted the Irish nation throughout all its existence, of the recognition Without eygs Britain would be terribly of its nationally by an Irish Parliament essential to convalencence, whilst for those in her history. (3) Local self-government. (4) Extension of the Parliamentary and municipal fracciuses. - (5) The development and encouragement of the labour and industrial interests of Ireland. The question we ask every Irishman to put to his mind and conscience at this solemn hour is, whether, in the history of his country the promises made by Butt and Parnell-renewed by their specesors -and the objects of the national organizations have been realised or faisified? What answer can any same or trathful Irishman give to such a question but this : that the constitutional movement has not only won everything the programme of Butt, Parnell, and the Irish organisations demanded, but a great deal more. For what is the record of theyears which have passed since Butt founded bodies and the delay decided upon is unneces- more securely vested in the people of Ireland than at any period in our-country's bistory.
