PROSECUTION UNDER THE SHIPPING ACT.

Mr Fitt (Sellers and Fitt, Solrs) on behalf of a young woman named Kate Toomey, a local shipping agent named James Brunswick-street, for a breach of the Act. Mr Fitt stated that he caused a complaint was brought under the 21st section of the Passengers' Act of 1855. He then read the notice which appeared in the Gazette.

Mr Hall (to Mr Connolly)—Is there any question about the form? Mr Connolly, solicitor for defendant—No, there is not.

Mr Fitt said that this case was a great public interest, and he would bench as little as he possibly could. He handed the Contract Ticket to the bench, and continuing, said that the breach he complained of was that on the 17th December last Miss Toomey, who was desirous of going to America—

The Bench here suggested that it would be better to have the evidence now, and the case afterwards.

Mr Connolly—The facts will be admitted, and therefore I will not give much trouble. (Proceeding)—In December Miss Toomey came into Mr Fife and said she was going to America some time in March. Mr Fife found there were no ships p March, as he found that the ship was listed to sail up to the end of January. He informed her that he would inquire the money to know if the passage could be got a ship for March. His contention was the construction of the section where person deposited money for the particular ship then the contract ticket issued.

Mr Hall said that in his opinion the point in the case was in a nutshell, and the issue was, did Mr Fife take money without issue of a contract ticket, or was it so. When Mr Connolly had heard the evidence in the case he could argue.

Evidence was then given. Miss Kate Toomey, the plaintiff, deposed
