DOCTOR Dwyer-Joyce was born at 73 Merrion Square, Dublin where his father, a well-known ophthalmic surgeon, who became professor of ophthalmic surgery at U.C.D., then lived. His grandfather, P. W. Joyce, was the well-known historian; his granduncle, Doctor Robert Dwyer-Joyce, the "Fenian poet." He had his early education at Leeson Street Convent and later at the Bower in Athlone. He took his secondary education at Clongowes Wood College and qualified as a doctor at the College of Surgeons, Dublin, in 1935. The following year he married Doctor Alice Louise Myles. They emigrated to take up practice in a village a little north of Cambridge, England. They have one son and two grandchildren. They live in a brick house they had built in 1938 in the heart of the very beautiful Fen country.
