Exclusive: Desmond O'Malley interview

By FERGAL KEANE

ONLY DAYS after the defeat of Charles McCreery's no-confidence motion in the Dail, Deputy Desmond O'Malley talked in an interview with the Limerick Leader about his new position as a backbencher and the events of the past week.

In a message to the people of East Limerick, he said:

"I am very grateful for the great support that I have got continuously through elections, and seven years ago I have always got a very high vote and it has always been a source of strength to me. In case they think that by resigning from the Cabinet I will be allowing my political activity to go into decline they need have no worry."

Next election

"I will be back at the next general election as one of the leading candidates."

Q. Do you think in retrospect that it was all worthwhile?

A. "I think that I made the ultimate protest that one could make within the rules of the day and I think it needed to be made. It is a considerable step and there is considerable principle involved. If I had any doubts about it the reaction since my resignation has been so enormously overwhelming in my favour that I certainly don't have any doubts."

How have people in Limerick reacted?

The reaction down here has been extremely good, apart from a few people who would criticise me no matter what I did. There have been only a handful of those and apart from that the reaction even from people I don't know has been very good."

You have heard the criticisms of Tony Bromell and the Sarsfield. Cunniff. How do you view that criticism in your own backyard?

"Well they have been criticising me for the past 15 years and I would have been absolutely flattered if they had done anything else. The division of opinion has always been there."

Limerick East

Being this in mind, do you think that Fianna Fail can be effective at the next general election in Limerick East?

"I do. Probably a great deal more so. That curran was always as well as out on a limb. It doesn't really make any difference. I'm particularly interested in the fact that both Willie O'Dea and I took the same line on the matter. I think that is a great help to the party locally."

Do you think that Willie O'Dea took the game line?

"No. I wasn't. From what he has been saying for some time - have had the feeling that anyone who isn't an enthusiastic supporter of his is in some way an enemy of his. The distinction - which I don't think he is able to see - between one's personal preference for a leader and one's loyalty when he is elected leader. I have no difficulty in acting within the government in a satisfactory way and showing loyalty to him as the elected leader. He wanted me to go a step further. He wanted me to go all the way to express my personal preference for him as leader above all others and I wasn't able to do that."

"At the cabinet meeting I said that. It was expressed in the statement after that saying that the ministers had reserved their position although it was perfectly clear what that meant."

"I wasn't prepared to be put in the position where I was expected to support him on Tuesday and be expected to vote against him on Wednesday. I thought the only honourable way out was to resign in view of the position that I was in."

Challenges

Is it a fair criticism to make of the anti-Haughey faction that on both instances challenges have been made to his leadership there has been a lack of credible middle of the road spokesmen? Or both?

"We have had Charlie McCreery who is known as strongly anti-Haughey, while if somebody like yourself or Gerry Colley had come out earlier and gone public instead of keeping secret the result would have been different."

"I wasn't aware of the latest thing. I didn't know about it until I got home last Saturday. I was in Spain with Bord Failte and EIT and the first I heard of it was when I got a phone call in Spain on Saturday morning. I was home on Saturday afternoon and there was nothing I could have done. I don't think there was a question of a leader or a spokesman. A number of people in the party were very disturbed about a number of things. While I don't favour the putting down of this motion and I don't believe I would have advised against it, I was then faced with a fait accompli and had to act as I saw fit in the light of the events that had happened in my absence."

"I suppose it is inevitable that newspapers and others would describe it as a faction of 22 club or whatever it is called nowadays but there was no formal institution. It was just 22 people who were prepared to stand up publicly and say we were unhappy."

"There were an awful lot more people who were unhappy but they just didn't feel able - because of the pressures that were put on them - to stand up and say it. They would have said it privately."

What about the stories of meetings in Connemara?

"There were no meetings in Connemara. I was on holiday there and other people at different times were on holidays there also. The scenario has been painted as a coup being plotted in Connemara."

"Not at all. I spent my time playing golf, not planning political coups. I was very interested in the remainder of the year. I was more interested in non-political activities."

When you became Minister for Trade, Commerce and Tourism did

Deputy O'Malley. "I don't believe in the principle of power at any cost."

You find the same zest and challenge for the job that you had in your previous role?

"There was much less to the job. I felt I was underemployed in a sense."

It wasn't so much that you were underemployed - you had enough to fill your job. It wasn't however, work of the same consequence as before and I would have been happier with a heavier burden if you like.

"I have no doubt about that. But we are faced with a government which has lost two of its most hardworking ministers. Some of the other members of that government - it could be said - are there because they say yes."

Do you think democracy in Ireland is heading down a dark road? We have had two very inconclusive general elections with the governments depending on the support of people who - to put it mildly - do not represent the views of the broad cross-section of the people. Will this happen again?

"Do you think I am a small number of deputies who are quite unrepresentative of the great majority of the people who have elected me to this House? I think we have arisen out of the two elections - had a voice which is out of all proportion to their numbers. It is unhealthy and it is giving a slightly undemocratic tinge to our affairs at the present time. This is if you like bad luck that you had two inconclusive elections. I don't think we selected very wisely when we had them. When you see how hamstringing we are today we really missed opportunities."

Do you think these people who exert such influence have been pandered to?

"They have, yes."

I am not just referring to Mr. Haughey in this.

"They have been pandered to on both sides and that is wrong. One can see why it was done but it is very regrettable that it should have happened."

You don't believe in the motto of power at any cost, which seems to be the overriding principle nowadays?

"No. I don't believe in the principle of power at any cost. If you are going to exercise power you should exercise it for the benefit of the country and not for the benefit of an individual or some small area."

What would you have done in the circumstances where you were faced with a very 50-50 situation in the Dail?

"I would have ploughed on regardless. I would have taken what I considered to be the right decision and put it up to the house to support me or reject me if they wanted to and it would be on their head whether they did or not. I think it is a very serious mistake that you would get a different response. You might find people on the other side of the house would not bring you down if they found you were making a serious effort to confront and tackle the very serious problems facing the country."

The economy

Economically speaking, where does Ireland go from here?

"That seems to be a pretty expensible thing in politics. Well I just know I couldn't live with that kind of situation. You can't really achieve properly with everyone falling in together in front of the camera - a paper limbo unit - and saying the one thing. There are very real feelings there and I felt it would have been better to confront the problems."

People say that you are naive in the extent of reacting to the skulduggery that has gone on in Fianna Fail.

"Maybe I am not very suitable for that and I am a bit naive about it because the Fianna Fail that I grew up in was very different to what has been in the past number of years."

"I know I am not particularly good at that sort of activity and I'm afraid I can't help that. My view is that sort of situation is an undesirable one and I would not go back to the way things were 10 or 15 years ago."

On the question of intimidation which has been preoccupying the media, what are your views about what happened on Wednesday night?

"It is utterly deplorable. It is the very antithesis of Irish parliamentary democracy and is reminiscent of what happened in Germany in the early thirties in the Reichstag when the German parliament was attacked by thugs. At least it can be said about that, it happened after the event but it is only the tip of the iceberg of the intimidation in a sense what was going on in the face of the people and that is at least one quarter of the parliamentary party. The pressures they were up against were appalling. I think it is only the action of the few who are prepared to stand up against that the right and the truth will win and must win."

Do you think the people who are taking the law into their own hands and pressures that are heaped on them.

"Did you come in for intimidation?"

"I wasn't too bad for me because I was on the periphery. At cabinet level there was a great deal of pressure but that was fair because it was open dialogue and fellows were trying to get me to change my mind."

For me personally it was worse the last time but for a lot of the people it was at least as bad this time.

Regrets

Do you have any regrets about going forward as a candidate the last time?

"No. The only regret I have in retrospect is perhaps that I should have withdrawn. I withdrew at the very last minute on the sort of grounds of party unity. I am wiser now to know that the kind of party unity that is based on expediency is not the kind of party unity that is based on principle."

Perhaps if it had allowed it to go for a vote rather than withdrawing at the last minute it might have cleared the air for a while. But it wasn't any help to the party at all. That is why it was better to leave it go to vote this time and to have a secret ballot the vote would have been substantially higher.

"Certainly as a result of the events of last week the party will be in a better off. A lot of people were given a lot of hope. If an election had been called a week ago I would be doubtful whether we would have done very well. I think we see the possibility of doing a great deal better now as a result of the events of last week."

Do you think Fine Gael's position has been entrenched by the public squabbling within Fianna Fail?

"I think if there is a disagreement in the party, it is a disadvantage. It is a disadvantage to the short-term benefit for the opposition."

But there is a difference between disagreement and what went on last week.

"It must be of some short-term benefit but it has not had the effect that it would have had if it had been brought into the open. It is now up to Mr. Haughey to rectify the problem."

Will your resignation affect you at the moment?

"It won't affect me adversely I hope. If you are to judge by the reaction in the past week, if there was an election held in Limerick this morning I think I would do remarkably well."

How do you view the stand taken by Gerry Collins?

"I would like to make a comment on the action of anyone else, that is a matter for themselves. I would hope that they would respect my stand and decision as much as I would theirs."

He is being talked about as a possible leader of Fianna Fail. Would you be prepared to serve under him?

"I am prepared to serve under any leader of Fianna Fail as long as he is properly elected."

Leadership

"Would you look forward to some day being leader of Fianna Fail, given the correct circumstances?"

"I have got ideas. My position seems to be a bit of a dilemma. If I were ever to get the leadership I would appreciate the honour and opportunity to do the best I could. It's not something I have been actively looking for and I had nothing to do with the affairs of last week."

If you had held your hand and done as Gerry Collins did and not have been a wiser course for you personally?

"No. Not for my conscience."

CASHING SOCIAL WELFARE CHEQUES

The Minister for Social Welfare is seriously concerned at the increasing incidence of the fraudulent cashing of social welfare cheques.

The Minister therefore urges banks, traders and others, who assist social welfare beneficiaries by cashing their cheques, to ensure that cheques are cashed only for persons who are known to them or who can produce satisfactory identification. The Minister also urges beneficiaries in their own interest to cash their cheques only where they are known or can be identified.

The Minister is satisfied that the exercise of proper control procedures would eliminate abuses that have developed. The ease with which cheques can be cashed has led to attacks on postmen to rob them of cheques in course of delivery and to other forms of theft.

It is in the public interest to eliminate cheque abuses. With this in mind the Department of Social Welfare in future will not reimburse those who cash social welfare cheques for unauthorised persons.

The Minister appreciates the assistance provided by those who have traditionally cashed cheques for social welfare beneficiaries. He hopes that they will continue to fulfil this role for those who are known to them or who can produce satisfactory identification.
