Win Harrington: The elderly and the young should have first claim on the State. We have a country where we have created huge divisions and we must start working out how and why that is.

By someone him and green... But at MARY BETH HENSCHEL dnn.

Champion of the disadvantaged

Her mother decided to go into women's pension and found another street to drink on for three years as its first project. She explained that in St. Clarissa, she encountered two women who had been working at the shelter, and that the minister of women's agend was to encourage them to join the women's movement. While working with the community, she was encouraged to start the "Women's Center," which began to provide resources and support for women in the area.

In her role as the "Women's Center" director, she continued her work with the community, organizing events, and providing support to women in need. She also worked with local businesses to provide job opportunities and training programs for women.

In the meantime, her mother was working at the Women's Center, and she continued to support and empower women in the community. She spent seven years getting the program off the ground and training other women on how to become involved in the movement.

She was known for her dedication to helping women and for her commitment to creating a better future for all. Her legacy continues to inspire others to work towards social justice and equality for all. She lived a life well lived.
