VERDICT IN CROSSING TRAGEDY

VERDICTS of accidental deaths were returned on two men at a resumed inquest at the City Courthouse yesterday when a solicitor on behalf of C.I.E. clarified a number of points for the Coroner and members of the jury.

It was stated that the road and the area around had remained unchanged in character for about 300 years.

Since 1840

Unchanged

Mr. O'Donovan said that the accident was obliged to reach the gate for the protection of the public, who would use them when traffic had passed. That the gates were closed by the gatekeeper's order when traffic was passed. That the gatekeeper's duty was to open the gates and all trains were to be brought to a standstill before they were opened.

Obliged

Mr. O'Donovan said that the gatekeeper was obliged to open the gate for the protection of the public, and that the gatekeeper was governed by the instructions of the company's rules. It was also the gatekeeper's duty to see that the gates were closed and locked. That the gatekeeper's duty was to open the gates and all trains were to be brought to a standstill before they were opened.
