

Schools compete for internet accolades

are in the wards which
on Novem-

OWEN HICKEY

News Reporter

ary School,
a, Gaelscoil
e West and Croom are categories for Awards.

were estab-
and reward
ful and in-
they use the
es.

wards, Caro-
mercial of-
erson of this
t.

our schools
d for awards
e interest in
nce last year
innovation
ery encour-

ase in the number of entrants the shortlist is larger than last year and pulling it together has been very challenging for the judges. I wish everyone who has been shortlisted the best of luck. We are looking forward to a very exciting awards event."

Laurel Hill Secondary School has been nominated for three separate awards, among them the award for best web design.

Gaelcholáiste Luimnigh could win up to five awards, with the Transition year portfolio blogs among the nominees for the Best Concept award - for which Colaiste Chiarain has also been nominated for its radio site.

Meanwhile, Gaelscoil Ó Doghair is set to battle it out for the Best School Website

For details on shortlisted nominations log onto [www.junior spiders.ie](http://www.junior spiders.ie).

Chewing the fat back in the old days

This picture of Ned Donnelly behind the counter of his bacon and grocery shop in Gerald Griffin Street in 1981 was published in last week's city edition. Part of our revival of Conor Keane's Down Your Street series, the picture unfortunately did not reproduce properly due to a technical error. According to Keane, Ned was always ready for a chat and decried the shopping experience in supermarkets of the day, describing the experience as "bang, bang, bang. Your messages are thrown up in front of you and you have to pack them yourself. That, my man, is no way to run a shop". Ned was clearly a man from the old school. Catch the last of Anthony Kilpatrick's excellent revival of the series in this Thursday's weekend city edition

at building school s sail for islands