THE LIMERICK CHRONICLE

(ESTD 1766)
NOVEMBER 20, 1924.

IN THE DAIL

having adjourned over the week-end, resumed its session with the consideration of two important Bills,
the Liquor Bill, which aroused interest on all classes of the population, and reached its closing stage, and will soon become law. Its effect will be to regulate hours of trading, to the benefit of the public. It effects a change in the old system, to which no alteration can be taken, while it also removes the limitation of the Liquor Bill. It was introduced, with certain amendments. First, the proposition to prohibit publichouses entirely on St.
Patrick's day was defeated, and then, on a second reading, the provision known as "the prohibition of the sale of spirits in publichouses" was rejected.
The Bill as a measure of reform was strengthened in committee by the insertion of provisions restricting the sale of spirits to "responsible persons," the raising of the duty on "sealed vessels" trade, and the introduction of bottles of standard size. An important measure is the Liquor Bill, which is designed to improve the quality of cattle in the county. It is a leading dairying county, and it might be expected the

MESSRS GOODWIN AND COMPANY.

Branch Establishment Opening To-morrow.

The old established firm of Messrs Goodwin and Company, glass and china merchants, William street, are, as may be seen by advertisement, opening their branch house at the corner of William street and O'Connell street to-morrow. In order to meet the requirements of their steadily expanding trade the firm some months ago acquired these commodious premises. Since then they have been in the hands of contractors. The work of thorough renovation has just been completed, and the premises are now brought fully up-to-date, and are a credit to the city as well as to local enterprise. The entire presents a highly artistic and bright appearance. There is a very handsome polished teak frontage, with carved caps on pillars, the carving being done by a Limerick man, Mr John Cronin, B.O., who by the way was awarded at the recent Taliteann Games a medal for excellence in wood carving. Entering the principal show room where two shops have been converted into one, we find it decorated in a very pretty art shade, which helps to show out the beautiful colouring of the goods on view. These are, or will be, placed in show cases and on counters, which are of mahogany, with ebonised finish, while the fixtures also include a novel patent specially adapted for the goods on view. The basement has been remodelled for the business of a bargain department, and here, too, the public will find displayed a wide assortment of fancy and useful articles appertaining to the trade. The whole premises are amply heated by radiators and lighted with artistic electric lamps.

The entire work, extensive as it is, has been carried out entirely by local labour. The architect is Mr Bryan F. Sheehy, M.S.A.; the contractor is Mr T. H. Bramall, of the Thomond Joinery Works; the painting has been carried out by Messrs J. McNamara and Son, 58 Catherine street; the electric lighting system has been carried out by Mr Joseph Portley, O'Connell Street, and the central heating by Mr T. Hassett, O'Connell street.

With this important addition to their old warehouse Messrs Goodwin and Company are now in a position to cater fully not only for high-class goods, but also for the medium trade, this firm being the largest buyers of glass and china, and therefore in a position to compete with any other firm in Ireland. The public will do well to pay Messrs Goodwin's new branch premises a visit, and they will find at their disposal a splendid assortment of goods from which to make a selection at moderate prices.

DEATH OF CARDINAL LOGUE,

A National Loss.

Sorrow, not confined to his own Church, but shared by all men of goodwill in Ireland, will be quickened by the news that Cardinal Logue, Roman Catholic Archbishop of Armagh and Primate of All Ireland, is no more. On Tuesday morning he celebrated Mass in St. Patrick's Cathedral, Armagh, with whose restoration his name and efforts are inseparably linked. At six o'clock on that evening he made his usual visit to the Blessed Sacrament. Two hours later he was taken ill, and at six o'clock yesterday morning he died of heart failure at his residence "Ara Coeli."

Cardinal Logue was in his eighty-fifth year. His health for some months had been feeble, but his energy of mind and spirit had sustained him, and his heart was in his life's work to the end. His medical attendant, Dr Kerr, Armagh, was with him during his last illness, and he received the last Sacraments from the Very Rev. Campbell, C.M., President of St. Patrick's College, Armagh.

The late Cardinal was writes the "Irish Times" master of a quiet and very pleasant humour which played with something of the magic of sunbeam through his speeches, even on the weightiest occasions. It was typical: it sprang from kindness of heart, and it awakened kindness in all who heard it. It was at once his own charm and his passport to the hearts of men. He leaves the memory of a Churchman who combined with broad and tolerant views, a wide unflinching charity, rare fearlessness in uttering the whole truth that stirred him. The blend of humour, tolerance and frank speech was the keynote of the man.

His Eminence, who was a native of Carriga County Donegal, was born in 1839, and had subsequently completed his 85th year. He has been Catholic Primate of All-Ireland since 1887.

Messages of condolence have been received from all parts of the country, and from President O'Grave, the Governor General, the Moderator of the General Assembly, and several Catholic Archbishops and Bishops, and representatives of public bodies.

Sympathy from Limerick.

Last night the Bishop Most Rev. Dr. Keenan sent the following message to the Archbishop of Armagh, Dundalk:—"Joined by priests and people here in expression of profound sorrow at the loss of a great Cardinal, who filled so large a space in the life of the Irish Church and the Nation. Requiescat in Pace."

The following is a copy of a telegram sent to the Mayor and Town Clerk of Limerick to-day:—"To Most Rev. Dr. O'Donnell, Coadjutor Archbishop, Armagh."

"Limerick deplures the passing of an excellent Churchman and her most illustrious home citizen.—R. W. DE COURCY, Mayor; W. NOLAN, Town Clerk."
