Limerick's First Delicatessen

It was inevitable that eventually Limerick should follow the example of Dublin, Cork and all other cities, and have its own Delicatessen.

But it was only a few weeks ago that this much-needed amenity came to Limerick.

In a few hours, its fame spread far and wide, so that to-day it enjoys a continuous clientele, all anxious to avail of the opportunity of purchasing cooked and uncooked foods at a moment's notice.

MONS. BELLONE

There can be very few chefs in the country whose experience in the culinary art exceeds that of Mons. Bellone.

In his native France and the Hotels of Metropole, Cork, Hydro, Kilkee, Old Ground, Ennis, Shannon Airport, and Cruise's, thousands of diners have enjoyed good food, cooked to perfection, on which was lavished all the skill, care and attention of this master craftsman.

Mons. Bellone has now turned his back on hotel work by opening Limerick's first Delicatessen, "La Rotisserie," and in so doing has brought the scope of his art to a much wider clientele than that of a single hotel—to the whole of Limerick.

Naturally, a craftsman must have the finest equipment available if his products are to be the very highest class, to a chef, pride of place in his kitchen must obviously be taken by the cooker. With such exacting demands being placed upon it, as speed, ease of control, flexibility, reliability and economy, only one method of cooking could possibly be considered.

Mons. Bellone, after cooking with a wide range of fuels (he has no doubt tried them all), chose that which met all his requirements and which, indeed, most chefs invariably choose—gas.

The result of this combination—the first-rate chef, good food and the high-grade cooking fuel—can best be judged by sampling the attractive fare displayed in his window at 12b, Cecil Street.

FRESH-FROZEN FOODS

Another very attractive item which the new Delicatessen will offer is the full range of the well-known Golden Spring Fresh-Frozen Vegetables. These tasty vegetables, which include such favourites as peas, broad beans, French beans, Brussels sprouts, cauliflower and many others, are becoming increasingly popular with housewives throughout Ireland and also in many parts of England, where a steady export market is being developed.

Mr. Bellone is to be congratulated in having the foresight to stock this up-to-date product, which can solve the problem of providing tasty vegetable dishes throughout the winter.

Quick-frozen foods are reported to retain all the natural flavour and health-giving properties of fresh vegetables.

"GOOD FOOD—COOKED TO PERFECTION"

In conclusion, it remains but to wish Mons. Bellone every success in his new venture and to hope that he will continue to tempt our discerning palates with "good food cooked to perfection" for many years to come.
