DENTISTRY

For a considerable time past, the public has not been working satisfactorily, because the dentists engaged are not able to cope with the work. This has been due to the fact that Dr. Hayes, M.O.H., in the course of a statement, made at the meeting of the Corporation on Monday night, that he stressed the point that the services of a third dentist were urgently required, if more conservative treatment was to be done.

The situation is such that the work is often left undone, and it is the duty of the firm to see that the treatment is done as quickly as possible.

Dentists can do little more than extract.
