Eleven killed in an IRA gun ambush outside Brompton

The dawn of the IRA's campaign in the county was the city of London, with the first major attack on the city on 26th March, 1972. This attack resulted in the deaths of 11 people, including eight women and children. The attack took place in the IRA's heartland, the area where the IRA had been operating for years. The attack was carried out by a group of IRA men, who had entered the city in a car. The car had been fitted with a bomb, which was detonated as the car approached the target.

The attack was a major setback for the IRA, and it was a wake-up call for the British government. The government responded by tightening security measures and increasing the number of security forces in the area. The IRA was also forced to rethink its strategy and tactics.

The attack on Brompton was a major event in the history of the IRA. It was the first major attack on a major city and it was a sign of things to come. The IRA would continue to carry out attacks in the years to come, and the city of London would become a major target for the IRA.
