

PJ opens a new chapter in book sales

Limerick and they didn't believe him. He said when he got my book he gave it to his family and said 'Read this and tell me if I was lying'. It verified all of his childhood memories."

Mr Taylor will be selling his book every day until Christmas Eve on O'Connell Street at the junction of Bedford Row and at the market on Saturdays.

"Lots of people have been coming up to me looking for the next instalment since they enjoyed my first book so much."

One such fan is Michael Richard Gleeson who travelled from Hawaii to attend Mr Taylor's recent book launch. Mr Gleeson also grew up on Upper Carey's Road before his father emigrated to the United States.

"He sent me a letter saying he appreciated what I had written," Mr Taylor said. "He had told his children and grandchildren about the hardship of life growing up in ing up on Upper Carey's Road and six weeks to write the sequel.

"When you're selling books and talking with people who enjoyed the last one, you don't feel the cold," Mr Taylor told the Limerick Chronicle.

"Who's Sorry Now?" is another stroll down memory lane with Mr Taylor who regales readers of the four months he spent at John the Baptist School and working at the Five Star supermarket on O'Connell Street.

It begins and ends on May 31, 1969, on the day his mother died.

Petula Martyn

THE cold weather has not deterred Limerick author PJ Taylor from setting up a stall on the city's main thoroughfare to sell his latest memoir, 'Who's Sorry Now?'

Standing outside Bank of Ireland, the writer is delighted to get the opportunity to meet the readers who bought his first book last year.

It took him six years to write 'Between the Three Bridges' about life grow-

PJ Taylor selling his book Who's Sorry Now at the Milk Market on Saturday

Russell's
SELECT BAR

Sinatras
AT THE HI-WAY

Mother dies in accident

Aine Fitzgerald

on the road between Hospital and Herbertstown at around 9.30am. The 41-year-old was taking her son Bradley to school at the time. He was uninjured. Ms McNabb was taken by ambulance to the Mid Western Regional Hospital in Doonadoville but was pronounced dead on arrival. Ms McNabb is also survived by her 13-year-old daughter Megan.

A COUNTY Limerick mother-of-two lost her life on Monday morning when her car skidded on black ice while driving her 10-year-old son to school.

The victim named locally as Katherine McNabb from Glenview Drive, Hospital died when her car crashed through a fence after hitting an icy patch

Burren Springs boss denies takeover claim

Chronicle Reporter

THE boss of water company Burren Spring has rejected claims his firm is negotiating a takeover with Munster Soft Drinks.

Brendan O'Mara, who heads up the Clare Street company, said instead his

Shannon Minerals Ltd/Burren Springs Ltd reject outright the comments from Munster Soft Drinks as being inaccurate and misleading," he said. "There has been no communication whatsoever between the directors of Shannon Minerals Ltd/