

resolution went to establish. But he did think it necessary for the House to go out its way, on a question of national importance, merely because the conduct of any particular man—was included under the general term to which it was opposed; he declared intended the resolution merely on the ground a bill.

The ATTORNEY GENERAL, in order to rid of the debate, proposed the question a adjournment; which, after some conversation, being put, there appeared, Ayes for an amendment, 115—Noes, 106—Majority for the amendment, 9.

Tellers for the ayes, Mr. Hobart, and the Hon. D. Browne.—Tellers for the noes, Sir Edward Newenham, and Mr. Curran.

WEDNESDAY, March 4.

Mr. GRATTAN moved for leave to bring in a bill for better securing the Freedom of Elections, by disqualifying certain officers in the revenue and other employments of Government from voting thereon.

Mr. BERESFORD rose, not, he said, to oppose the leave for bringing in the bill, but to give notice, that when the bill should be brought in he would oppose it in every stage.

Mr. FORBES on the other hand, rose to give the Hon. Gentleman notice, that he would support the bill in every stage, if it was similar to that which his Right Hon. Friend had brought in on a former occasion.

Leave was given, and a Committee appointed to prepare the same.

Mr. FORBES moved for leave to bring in a bill to disable any person from being chosen a member of, or sitting or voting in the House of Commons, who has any pension during pleasure or from any number of years from, or holds any office or place of profit created after a certain time under the crown, and to limit the amount of pensions.

After some conversation between Mr. Mason, Sir Henry Cavendish, and Mr. Forbes, the latter said he should probably bring in the bill in a day or two.—Leave was given.

Sir HENRY CAVENDISH observed, as this seemed to be a day devoted to the introduction of bills, he wished to know whether it was intended to introduce a bill this session for reducing the interest on money.

The CHAN. of the EXCHEQUER professed to think as favourably of that measure as ever he had done, and said he did intend to introduce such a bill in due time.

THURSDAY, March 5.

Read a second time the bill for granting certain aids to pious and charitable purposes—the bill for granting certain duties to be paid by the Trustees of the Royal Exchange—the bill for granting 5000l. to the Dublin Society—the bill for granting 4000l. to the Trustees of the Linen Manufacture and the bill for granting 6000l. to the Lord Chancellor and Judges, towards building the new Four Courts and Public Offices.

There are several private letters in town, which positively assert the relapse of a Great Personage.—Dub Ex Post.

The Regency is at an end. Let the differences on that question be forgot—Loyalty revives—Government is re-established.

Died in London, the 1st inst. James Neff, Esq; late of this city: He was a sincere friend, and deservedly regretted by all who knew him.

DIED. Last Thursday, at Graige, in this County, Miss Deborah Greene, second daughter to the late Francis Greene, Esq; of youth beauty and innocence; if uncommon affability, and gentleness of manners could insure length of days and happiness in this world—they would be her's: "But Heaven thought otherwise."

On the DEATH of Miss DEB. GREENE.

THE Spring returns to spread her verdant train,
An many a flower on hill and dale is seen,
But ah! their opening charms may close again,
The sweetest flower lies faded now with GREENE.

Ah! what avails it to have charms like thine,
Thy gentle look—could not the stroke delay.
Relentless Death could see each beauty pine,
And mow thee, once the fairest flow'r away.

Thus have I seen beneath the friendly shade,
The vale's sweet lilly lift its modest head,
The chilling blast of Night, doth soon invade,
And pitying Morn beholds its beauty's dead.

But you are fled where beauty never dies,
Where Spring for ever blooms, where joy is seen,
Snatch'd from each tempest here, you there shall rise,
And flourish past all time an ever-GREENE.
