 are, if the respectable Gentlemen who compose our County and City Grand Juries, were to examine that House, it would call up all their finer feelings to exert themselves in its ample support, which would fall easy on individuals, and not be the twentieth-penny of what the English pay to support their poor. To see the aged poor lame and blind relieved—to see the reduced citizen and house-keeper supported—to behold the lunatics taken care of, and prevented from being a burden to their families and a nuisance to the public—to contribute to a House capable of rescuing 400 of our fellow-creatures from the very depth of human misery—must have a strong claim on our humanity, and animate every man to support an institution, which wants only the aid pointed out by Parliament, to be extensively and truly useful to Society, especially as all sturdy Beggars are forced to earn their own maintenance.
