

...ution, and we rejoice to hear from the informed men in this kingdom, that their opinion and intelligence on this subject are esteemed as highly as their spirit and firmness in the greatest struggle which brought their Monarch to submission.

Under the article of the "Droits du Roi," we acknowledge that the dignity of the Crown is essential to the welfare of the Empire; but splendour and establishment should be derived from the people; and that the King has and ought to have patrimonial estate of his own applicable to the support of his Household.—That therefore there should be established a Civil List, to be granted by the nation; that the annual sum thus appropriated to the maintenance of the Crown, should, to testify the loyalty and liberality of Frenchmen, be larger than the sum hitherto taken and expended by the King.

Under the article of "Organization and Plans de l'Assemblée Nationale," the Committee report, that in their opinion the Assembly should consist of two Houses. That the Clergy and Noblesse should compose one House—The Commons another. That the Clergy to be represented by the Archbishops and bishops—The inferior Clergy to be a Third Estate, and to be eligible to sit in the Assembly as Deputies, in common with the fellow citizens.

The Noblesse to be represented by the Heads of Houses only, being so numerous—That there be a limited number chosen to represent the whole, until the body shall be reduced to a certain number. The younger sons to be eligible to sit in the Commons' House as Deputies.

This great outline of the Constitution of France, and can be made applicable to the state of England, they will have a government of equal rank with our own, and in which they will be able to avoid the numerous evils which, at this time, corruption, and apathy, have engendered in ours.

The Duc de Liancourt was the first who attracted the notice of the danger that threatened his life.—"My Lord," said the Duke, "your Royal Highness's head is devoted, and with horror your name in the dreadful execution roll." The Prince could scarcely believe his ears; he did not imagine that the daring of the opposite party would ever come to harbour a thought against the life of his brother of their King. But the Duke told him upon his honour, that what he had told him was strictly true, his Royal Highness believed him, and then thought it all time for him to consult his own safety.

The Duke de la Vauguyon and his son have stopped at the very instant they were going to embark on board a vessel. They went under the name of Chevalier.

In these transactions it may be perceived that the public expectation in France was greatly disappointed in Mr. Necker's arrival. The Minister's presence was to be the harbinger of harmony, good neighbourhood, and tranquillity. As far as his influence extended, Mr. Necker acted to his utmost; he acted in a very pathetic and forcible manner, and his advice was founded upon the most mature consideration.—In the midst of their joy, the Electors of Paris were disappointed, and fortunate would it be for the Kingdom if the same spirit of turbulence and rebellion which has for some time past actuated the French had not again discovered itself. We repeat, that the renewed violences of the French will in the end destroy that liberty they pretended to support, and tend farther to himself, nor permits his friends to enrich themselves with the treasures of a Begum—Oude and Benares have reason to rejoice.

On Thursday last being the day on which the Right Hon. Lord Viscount Courtenay came of age, his Lordship's tradesmen celebrated that event at the London Inn, (Exeter); and after a very elegant dinner, dedicated the evening to Bacchus, Apollo, and merry Momus.

On Friday morning died suddenly at Southampton, the Right Hon. the Countess Dowager of Castlehaven, relict of the late Earl of Castlehaven, of the kingdom of Ireland, and Baron Audley, of England.

General Fitzwilliam, who died lately at Richmond, was brother to the last, and uncle the present Lord Viscount Fitzwilliam, of Merrion, in the county of Dublin.

He was Colonel of the fine regiment called the Green Horse, from the facing of the troopers regimentals, one of the four regiments of heavy cavalry on the Irish establishment, lately reduced to light dragoons, but which, that they might preserve the rank they held before all the marching regiments of horse, have been honoured with the name of Dragoon Guards.

By a letter received by the Secretary of the Incorporated Society for promoting English-Charter Schools, we learn, that Mess. Drummond, Bankers, in London, have written advice of there being deposited in their house four per cent. Bank Annuities, to the amount of 40000l. being the donation of a gentleman, who desires his name may be concealed, to the fund of the Society, which thereby receives an accretion of 1600l per ann. for ever.

The supporters granted to Lord Fitzgibbon, we hear, are the same which belonged to the antient and illustrious house of Desmond, from which family his Lordship is lineally descended.

A Privy Council is to be summoned in a day or two, to take into consideration the conduct of Captain Harrison of the brig Duke of Leinster, who brought out the last convicts, in order to go for Nova Scotia, but put them on shore in Newfoundland;—during the voyage, they touched at the Cove of Cork, where the Captain put Mr. Fay on board a sloop bound for Wales. By the agreement made with Government, the contractors are liable to a penalty of fifteen hundred pounds, for not fulfilling their engagement.

Extract of a Letter from Trim, dated Aug. 6, from a Gentleman of consequence there to another in this city.

"Our trial in the Borough business came on the 30th of last month; we obtained a special verdict, which was what we looked for:—All the facts were found in our favour, and the points of law are to be decided by the Court of King's Bench next Term."

Letters from Ballinasloe, by Friday's post advise, that the reason why no progress was yet made in the sale of the wool in the fair was the absence of a great number of the gentlemen growers, who were under the necessity of attending the Galway assizes, and that in all probability little or no business would be done until their return. From fifteen to sixteen shillings a stone, however, was expected to be the average price when the sale commences.

not lost half the number of men that have died of the regiments quartered elsewhere, and you will be surprized that since our arrival in June, 1785, to this time, we buried but one officer, viz. the Quarter-Master.—The native inhabitants (Charibs) are very quiet at present, they possess by far the most pleasant part of the island; I am sorry to add we are likely to remain among them five years longer."

We are happy to announce, that there is the most flattering prospect in this neighbourhood of an abundant harvest; a Gentleman who is a Proprietor of Bolting-mills in this County, was yesterday offered a large parcel of new Wheat to be delivered in a fortnight, at 13d. per stone.

Sunday evening, Mr. O'Brien, High Constable, apprehended Thomas Vaughan, charged with robbing George Dukars, soldier in the 58th regt. of his bayonet and hat, value about 6s.—also with fracturing his skull.—And early on Monday morning Mr. O'Brien apprehended Michael Dwyer, and John Jenks, charged with violently assaulting and stabbing on several parts of his body, Patrick Cronin, of Loughmore, on Sunday night near Ballinecurra turnpike;—they were all committed to the City goal.

Last Tuesday evening a boy about nine years old fell into the river near the county Hospital, and to the surprize of a great number of spectators floated on the surface, until he was near Baal's Bridge, when a man named William Nixon, to whom much applause is due, plunged into the water and they were both carried as far as the new Assembly-house, before Nixon could recover himself, the tide being out he got to a shallow spot and was able to save himself and the child.

The boy thus saved from death is the son of John Hawkins, who has been confined in Jail, these seven months for a debt of 20l. he has a wife and several children in great distress, the relief of whom is most humbly submitted to the humane and charitable. To visit the prisoner, to comfort the widow and the fatherless, are Godlike actions and cannot fail of meeting a great reward.

This morning, a detachment from the 58th regt. of 20 men, commanded by Lieut. Ibbetson, marched hence for Kiltrush, where they are to remain, while the regiment is quartered in this City.
