

of which he thought might be resolved these questions:

Whether the Provost has the power to assign pupils at pleasure, and whether the tutor to whom he assigns is bound to receive them?

2. Whether he has a negative on the majority of Senior Fellows at the Board—or whether the determination of the majority concludes him—the Provost taking the votes of such as may be absent?

3. If he has an arbitrary negative at the election of Fellows and Scholars?

On the latter question, his Lordship said, he would at present give no opinion.

On the question, whether the Provost can assign, &c. and whether the tutor is bound receive involuntary pupils? he decided in the affirmative. The agreement of the Junior Fellows, he added, was not necessary.

On the question, has the Provost a negative on the Members of the board, or do the majority of them conclude him, he taking the votes of absent members?—His Lordship observed, that notwithstanding usage had for many years warranted the practice, the construction of the Statute by no means granted it, and that the bye law which instituted it must be rejected.

An ordinary Visitation will probably be made to our University in November next, after which they will take place regularly every third year.

The most salutary consequences must result from this frequency of Visitation—it must totally preclude that spirit of litigation which unfortunately has for some time past been too prevalent there—the more so as the wisdom of the late decision have confirmed that had been entertained of the integrity and impartiality of the Visitors.

The recent determination of the Visitors of the University, one great branch of the Provost's power is entirely annihilated. He was equally supposed to possess a negative on all the proceedings of the board of Senior Fellows, whose negative was in fact frequently exerted before and after debate; and like every privilege, we used to think, was probably sometimes ill-exercised.—But it is no more, and therefore IN PACE.

The vitriolic acid used, in bleaching Linens has frequently destroyed the quality of the goods, which made some substitute very desirable. The muriatic or marine acid, recently discovered and for which the trustees of the linen manufacture have given a bounty, will prove of much importance to the kingdom when adopted by the bleachers, and tend to the further improvement and extension of our staple manufacture.

Letters were yesterday received in town from France, via Bourdeaux, which assert that twenty thousand troops, composed of national guards, Swiss regiments, and such of the veteran French army as were capable of marching to the frontiers, were ordered by the National Assembly, to oppose the entrance of the Prince of Conde; when two entire regiments consisting of 1400 men each, marched from the rest of the army to join that Prince.

This dereliction is considered as a bad omen for the cause of democracy.

Other accounts add, that the mob had re-assembled in great numbers at Bourdeaux, and broke open corn stores which they ransacked; and, having seized upon such persons as were pointed to them for being concerned in raising the price of bread, they without any form of trial brought them to the lamp-post, and executed them. Those who made any manner of resistance to this species of death, were most horribly mangled and their limbs torn from their bodies, and strewed about the streets.

We hear that a FEMALE CHARITY SCHOOL, under the patronage of the respectable inhabitants of this City, is to be opened in Newgate-lane, on Monday next. The Patrons and Governors, desirous of making this institution beneficial as possible, have determined to add, to the customary mode of instruction, the knowledge of plain work, knitting, spinning, &c. to enable poor children to live partly by their own labour and to qualify them for the different employments assigned them by Providence:—These habits of industry, learned at an early period, will leave impressions not easily removed, and influence their conduct ever after; for, such of them as are so unfortunate as not to be trained up to business, ere they arrive at the age of fourteen, run the risque of being ignorant during their lives. The propriety and necessity of this institution, as well as the advantages that must consequently result from it, are too obvious to need much explanation: Not only the feelings of a sympathizing heart, but a concern for self-preservation require a particular attention to the means which may contribute most effectually to render these females useful, instead of being a burden and disgrace to society, and totally unacquainted with either labour or device, “by which man prospers.”—Having duties to perform in all domestic affairs, they, consequently, have it frequently in their power either to disturb the peace, or to promote the comfort and safety of those with whom they live, and so immediately is our duty made to coincide with our interest, that much more real satisfaction will accrue to a generous mind, from denying itself, or retrenching some unnecessary expences, to relieve the unfortunate, and rescue helpless objects from misery and its concomitant appendages, than would arise from the indulgence of every temporal gratification.

It is hoped, with every degree of confidence, that the worthy inhabitants of Limerick and its vicinity (remarkable for their humane disposition) will countenance this undertaking, and use their influence in its favour: As the subject is worthy the peculiar consideration of the Ladies, their kind patronage cannot fail accelerating its establishment.

They that instruct many to Justice, shall shine as suns for all Eternity. DAN. xii. 3.
