place the flood had risen to no less a height than four feet in every house; many of the wretched inhabitants of cabbins, who were confined to ground floors were obliged to quit with their children, leaving their little furniture, &c. to the mercy of the waters. It being market day, and the weather extremely fine, the town was consequently much crouded, which added considerably to the confusion; all were in alarm!—mothers running promiscuously, they knew not where screaming for the supposed loss of their offspring—husbands in search of wives and children—horses, some with and others without riders, driving thro' the streets; in short, every face wore the marks of distraction, not knowing what to im-pute the cause of their alarm; some without giving themselves time to consider what course the waters took, thought the sea was pouring in upon them, while others more ignorant imagined the world at an end.

At six the flood began to fall, and at eight the river was very little higher than it usually is at this season of the year; however, notwithstanding this general confusion, there was but one life lost, which was that of a young man of the name of Cronin, who happening to stand on the battlement of a small bridge opposite the New-Gaol, was called to by a poor woman to assist her getting up also, on which he humanely reached her his hand, but the woman, becoming alarmed at the rapid motion of the water, and letting go her hold, the unhappy man fell back into the river, and was instantly hurried under the Parade arch and drowned. His fate is the more to be lamented, as we are informed he was the only support of a mother and three younger children, who have now to depend on the bounty of the benevolent. After a diligent search, his remains were next morning found, near a mile distant from the town.

What makes this flood the more extraordinary is, that we have had no rains in town during the day, nor in any other part of the country, for some time before; but we since learn, that it was occasioned by a tremendous shower which fell in about the circumference of a mile, and which could be compared to nothing less than the bursting of a West-India tornado, as the water descended in streams or sheets, continuing but a few moments, preceded by a single clap of thunder.

A correspondent has favoured us with the perusal of a letter which he received from a friend of his, one of the National Assembly, at Paris, (the son of the unfortunate General Lally) and which says,—'I cannot forget that Irish blood rolls in my veins, I cannot forget your glorious constitution. To this, I adverted, when on the 2d of the month, I arose, and among other things maintained, that in the earlier periods of the French monarchy, the most absolute of its Princes were no more than the first citizens, or members of the republic, "Since I wrote last there was no business to signify till Friday; the buyers met, and came to certain resolutions that evening—Saturday a little was done—but this day something considerable. I believe there are 7 or 800 bags of fleece wool now sold; a few indifferent and coarse parcels at 14s. and 14s 6d.—and the rest from 15s. to 16s 6d. So tedious a market never was known—and it may perhaps hang on two or three days more;—however, measures are now taking (by the buyers principally) to prevent such delays in future"
