

It is a circumstance truly curious, and which is well worthy the consideration of the British Government, that during the whole of the disturbances in France—of their necessities—of their actual want—when there was a cessation in every sort of trade, and Government in all its functions was torpid—the mighty work at Cherbourg went on without the interruption of a single day. The army was neglected, and broken in pieces. The navy was neglected.—The workmen struck in the dock-yards both of Brest and Toulon. But at Cherbourg all was regular and steady. They went on with their usual alacrity, and the workmen duly paid in ready money.

This proves that this work is estimated so highly by the French nation, that neither tumult nor poverty can draw them from the enterprise, or even make them relax in it. In this very moment, when, unless by some miracle they procure ninety millions more than the produce of the month, a temporary stoppage must take place in their payments, they go on at Cherbourg, and there is no apparent want of specie. Surely some funds must have been appropriated to this public work, and made inalienable, or it is considered as equally important with the existence of the people.

Comte D'Artois's debts amount to eight millions of livres: the illustrious Heir Apparent of England, always engaged in offices of good, owes not a tenth part of that sum—and yet payment is shamefully suspended!

It is extraordinary, that the present year is the centenary when the Royal House of Bourbon ascended the throne of France. This epocha commenced two centuries since, on the 21st November, 1589, when the Cardinal of Bourbon was proclaimed King of France, by the name of Charles X.

The greater number of the Irish students at Louvain have accepted commissions in the army which are engaged in the cause of liberty and independence; and among others numbers of priests have joined them, and are beating the drum ecclesiastic. Thus, when Henry the IV of France had to fight his way to the Throne, the clergy armed themselves with swords and carbines, and fought as desperately as any of the laity.

By a valuation made by some of the Gentlemen of the Sun Fire Office, (London,) the damage done by the late dreadful fire at Houghton-house, the seat of the Earl of Oxford, is estimated at 4000l. exclusive of the matchless groupe of pictures.—The fire broke out in the Laundry.

Yesterday his Excellency the Lord Chancellor gave a grand dinner to many of the principal Nobility and Gentry in town, which was distinguished for that magnificence and elegance which so justly characterise the entertainments of Lord Fitzgibbon.

It is the determination of the British Government, that all future pardons shall be on condition of transportation for life. And as a further means of clearing the country of Thieves and vagabonds, the destination of all felons convicted on transportation offences, is to be New South Wales.
